

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Sem. 3.
358.

Sen. 3. 358

THE SEMITIC LANGUAGES.

INQUIRIES
CONCERNING THE STRUCTURE OF THE SEMITIC LANGUAGES.

PART I.

BY SIR W. MARTIN, D.C.L.

WILLIAMS AND NORGATE,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON; AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
1876.

All rights reserved.

HERTFORD:
PRINTED BY STEPHEN AUSTIN AND SONS.

IN MEMORY OF
JOHN COLERIDGE PATTESON,
MISSIONARY BISHOP IN MELANESIA, WHO LAID DOWN HIS LIFE FOR HIS BRETHREN
20th September, 1871.

INDEX.

THE HEBREW VERB.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	1
GENERAL RULES	10
IMPERFECT	11
PERFECT	13
SUBJOINED PERFECT	16
PARTICLE OF CONNEXION	20
PARTICLE OF SEQUENCE	23
BREACH OF SEQUENCE	25
CONCURRENT FACTS	28
PRECATIVE FORM	29
PARTICIPLE	31
HEBREW NARRATIVE	32
GRAMMATICAL NOTES	37
GENESIS	37
EXODUS	47
LEVITICUS	53
NUMBERS	54
DEUTERONOMY	57
JOSHUA	62
JUDGES	64
I. SAMUEL	67
II. SAMUEL	71
I. KINGS	74
II. KINGS	76
PSALMS	78

ERRATUM.

Page 16, line 7. For IMPERFECT read PERFECT.

THE HEBREW VERB.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTION.

1. Ever since the revival of learning in Western Europe, the structure of the Hebrew language has been a cause of perplexity to scholars.

In the middle of the last century, Bishop Lowth, in his Lectures on the Sacred Poetry of the Hebrews, having occasion to notice one of the chief difficulties of the subject, complained that interpreters of the Hebrew text, in their endeavours to escape from that difficulty, were driven to translate according to their own apprehension of the meaning rather than according to laws of Grammar, or any fixed principles. Writers on Grammar, he said, did indeed note the fact, but were unwilling to confess their inability to explain it: they attempted to hide their ignorance under a veil of technical terms. He could not believe that those unexplained variations of structure were introduced at random; on the contrary, it was beyond doubt that they had in them some special force and fitness.

It was not to be wondered at, that many of them appeared to us now intricate and obscure, considering the remote antiquity of the Hebrew language.*

2. The difficulties, to which Bishop Lowth referred, lay deep in the structure of the language. They concerned, chiefly, points on which, most of all, correctness of interpretation depends; namely, the power of the so-called Tenses of the Hebrew verb. The grammatical forms, to which this name was given in the days of Bishop Lowth, are two in number. They resemble tenses properly so called, in so far as they express action or condition, and as they combine with the root, which indicates that action or condition, certain prefixes and suffixes which indicate persons. It was natural that scholars, who were familiar with the languages of the West only, and derived thence their notions of grammar, should conceive they found in them the natural and typical structure of language in general; and should believe that these Hebrew forms, which so far resembled the tenses of those languages, resembled them further in that point from which the notion and name of tense were derived. As the notion of time, as past, present, or future, is inwrought into the very substance of the tense, so it was assumed that these forms carried in them the notion of time also. Accordingly, one of these forms was regarded as a Past Tense; the other, as a Future. The Present time was held to be sufficiently indicated in other ways.

* The passage, of which the substance is given above, occurs in Prælect. xv. "Si adeamus Interpretes," etc.

3. This theory had been long accepted: yet there were many obvious cases which it was inadequate to explain. In narratives of past events, the Hebrew use is to tell, one by one, acts or events in the order in which they occurred. Now the form ordinarily employed in such narratives for specifying each act or event was seen to be the form which it had been agreed to call the Future Tense. The events so narrated in due sequence were of course coupled by a conjunction, commonly rendered in the English Version by and. The original theory accordingly received an amendment or supplement. It was laid down that the conjunction had in such cases a special power of converting the Future Tense into a Past. A like difficulty presented itself in cases where the so-called Past Tense, with a conjunction prefixed, was used in passages where it was impossible to treat it as really indicating a past time. Here too a conversive power was conceived to belong to the conjunction.

It is a strong objection to this theory that no such use as that which is supposed has been found to exist in any of the other Semitic dialects, notwithstanding the close resemblance of those dialects to one another; nor in any other language.

It is a further objection that the supposed conversion is unnecessary and superfluous, even according to the principles of the supporters of this theory; for they assert that the language contains a proper Past Tense and a proper Future Tense. Why resort to these devices for converting a Future into a Past, a Past into a Future, when, as they assert, direct expressions for the Past and the Future already exist?

After all, it was found necessary to admit that in certain cases the rule of conversion does not apply.

With all these qualifications, the theory, as above stated, is found in many cases insufficient, as is shown by the frequent instances in which the English translators of the Old Testament have departed from it.

4. Professor D. Michaelis, of Göttingen, in his Annotations upon Bishop Lowth's Lectures, indicated the error into which the grammarians had fallen. They had been misled by conceiving the structure of the Semitic verb to be completely similar to that of the verb in the languages with which they were conversant. He discerned that in the Hebrew the forms commonly called Tenses do in fact express no time, and that each of those forms is in fact used in reference sometimes to past time, sometimes to present or to future.

About the beginning of this century, Professor Jahn, of Vienna, in his Grammatica Linguae Hebrææ, expounded this view, and in conformity with it abandoned the old technical names of the so-called Tenses. The forms, which had been formerly called Past and Future, he named First and Second Aorists. The general principle of the new theory he stated in the following words:

"Aoristus primus sistit rem perfectam, jam præsentem, jam præteritam, jam futuram."

"Aoristus secundus sistit rem imperfectam, jam præsentem, jam præteritam, jam futuram."

In accordance with this view, later writers on Hebrew Grammar have named the two forms Perfect and Imperfect.

It is to be noticed also that writers of authority on the cognate dialect of Arabia now recognize the same principle as prevailing in that dialect, and adopt the same terms to designate the two corresponding forms of the Arabic verb. "The temporal forms of the Arabic verb (says Professor Wright) are but two in number; the one expressing a finished act, one that is done and completed in relation to other acts (the Perfect); the other, an unfinished act, one that is just commencing or in progress (the Imperfect). A Semitic Perfect or Imperfect has, in and of itself, no reference to the temporal relations of the speaker." (Grammar of the Arabic Language, vol. i. s. 77.)

5. Another important advance towards a true theory of Hebrew Grammar was made about the same time by Professor Heinrich Ewald, of Göttingen. He appears to have been the first to discern the correspondence of the two conjunctions, which in our Authorized Version are indifferently rendered by our English and, with the two conjunctions which in Arabic appear as wa and fa: the former expressing connexion, the latter indicating sequence or consequence. Ewald's view is now generally received.

6. Notwithstanding the progress thus made, we find that our best treatises on Hebrew Grammar do not furnish any clear and consistent theory. We find, for instance, the verbal forms still named the Past Tense and the Future Tense, whilst it is admitted that these tenses mark also all other times. We still read of the Future with Vau

Conversive; yet the use of that construction is described as being that of marking an advance or progress in the events related. Thus the old and the new are combined, though they cannot be harmonized. Old terms are retained, though the theory to which those terms were fitted is abandoned; and the new theory is adopted, apart from the new terms, which alone fitly express it.

As to the unsatisfactory state of Semitic scholarship at this time, it will be sufficient to cite the testimony of Bishop Ellicott:

“It would certainly seem that, much as has of late been done for the study of the Hebrew language, especially in Germany, there is still room for a more scientific development of many of the laws by which that ancient language appears to be governed. There is even now (as a reference to any of the more recent commentaries on the books of the Old Testament will clearly show) less linguistic precision, less mastery of details, less recognition of those bye-laws which in every language, but especially in the Semitic, so much regulate special interpretations—less, in a word, of scholarship, as distinguished from learning, than we might have expected from the corresponding advances in the Greek language.”—(Aids to Faith, p. 456.)

7. This state of things renders it highly desirable that some effort be made to ascertain and to define accurately the principles and the rules by which the structure of the Hebrew language is regulated. The Scriptures of the Old Testament are at this time subjected to a searching criticism: a revision of the Authorized Version is actually in hand : yet the best security against error appears to be wanting.

8. However needful some work of this kind may be, it may well seem strange that this task should be undertaken by persons far distant from the centres of European learning, and without the advantage of personal communication with living teachers of highest authority. It may appear to be a somewhat presumptuous attempt to enter upon a field which might have been more fitly left to others. It may be well, therefore, to state the circumstances under which this work was commenced.

The two friends, the result of whose inquiries on this subject is given in this volume, had acquired some knowledge of the Semitic tongues before they entered on the study of the dialects of the Southern Pacific. They were struck, as earlier students had been, by certain points of resemblance between the two groups : not a resemblance in words, or such as would indicate any affinity in the roots of the languages, but rather one which lies in the structure of speech, in the forms of thought, and which seems to show that the two groups belong to a similar stage in the growth of language. In particular it was noticed that in these languages forms of the verb exist, which convey the notion of action or condition, and nothing more ; the time to which the action or condition belonged being left to be gathered from the context, or from the circumstances under which the words are spoken. Here, then, was a grammatical form, the existence of which had been divined by European students of Hebrew, but of which no actual instance had been known to the learned men of Western Europe.

Further, it was obvious that even the rudest of the known languages of the ocean, however simple in structure or deficient in flexion, do yet suffice to convey from man to man with reasonable accuracy those notions of time, of position, connexion, or relation, without which speech would fail of its end. There is always present some device of structure, or of mere collocation, which, being understood alike by speaker and hearer, excludes doubt or misunderstanding as to these points. It was hard to think that the Hebrew tongue did not possess some adequate means of conveying thought with more of precision than had been apparent to our grammarians.

Accordingly we set ourselves to examine carefully the Hebrew documents, endeavouring to ascertain, by a comparison of passages, the rules by which the use of the several forms of the Hebrew verb was controlled, and to define, so far as might be practicable, the more minute rules by which the speakers of the language were guided in other respects.

The work went on smoothly as long as my friend shared in it. His wide knowledge corroborated what had been inferred from a narrower field, and furnished many new suggestions. Amid many cares, his interest in this undertaking—his conviction that it would in due time yield fruit—never faltered. To his co-operation and encouragement whilst he lived, and since his departure to the remembrance of his urgent words, it is due that the inquiry has been carried thus far. If time and strength be given, other researches in the same field may be brought to completion.

Throughout the following pages, the letters and vowel-points of the Hebrew are replaced by characters and marks more familiar to our eyes.

Alef is not expressed otherwise than by the vowel of which it is the vehicle.

Beth, Peh and Tau, with dagesh, are represented by b, p, t; without dagesh, by v, f, θ:

The sibilants Samech, Tsade, Sin and Shin, by s, š, ś, š italic.

The remaining letters, following the order of the Hebrew Alphabet, are represented by g, d, h, w, z, χ, t italic, y, k, l, m, n, ʿ, k italic, r:

The moveable Sheva and its Compounds, by ě, ǣ, and ō.

CHAPTER II.

GENERAL RULES.

The Rules set forth in this chapter are deduced from a careful examination of the Hebrew text. The examples here given as illustrating the Rules have been chiefly taken from the Historical Books as they stand in the Hebrew Canon, beginning with Genesis and ending with the Second Book of Kings. Though the style of these books is for the greater part of the historical or narrative kind, yet there is a large admixture of other elements. There are numerous examples of the ordinary speech of the Hebrew people intermingled with the more solemn discourses of the lawgiver and the prophet, and with songs of triumph and devotion. To these books belong two especial advantages for our purpose: the context is generally sufficiently clear to aid the reader in determining the true rendering; and there are few passages as to which prepossessions might interfere with the fairness of our induction. Occasionally, examples have been added from the Psalms and the Book of Proverbs.

1. The Forms of the Hebrew verb, which are here called Imperfect and Perfect, are not tenses in the proper sense, i.e. the notion of time as past, present or future, is not inherent in the Form. They note only actions or conditions and the persons of whom such actions or conditions are predicated. They predicate a certain state of a certain subject, and no more.

The time to which the action or condition, expressed by the form, belongs in each case, is to be gathered from the context. The present time is understood, if none other is suggested by the context. The difference between the two Forms is not then any difference in time, but a difference in the way of conceiving the action or condition. The Forms then may be accurately described as moods indicating modes of thought, rather than as tenses. These moods taken in connexion with indications of time supplied by the context, and so having their generality limited and restricted, become equivalent to our tenses. Viewed as moods, they differ from each other much in the same way as becoming from being, as motion from rest, as progress from completion.

IMPERFECT.

2. The Imperfect is used, in independent sentences or clauses, to express acts or events which are regarded as transitory or incomplete, commencing at some particular point of time, or continuing during some interval of time, past, present or future. It may be (a) a single act: or (b) a recurring act: or (c) an act expected to occur in a certain state of things whenever that may arise ; or (d) an act dependent on other acts, hypothetical, or contingent. This Form is used also (e) after words of prohibition or deprecation.

EXAMPLES.

a. Judges xix. 16, 17, "There came an old man from his work, and he saw a wayfaring man in the street of the city. And the old man said, Whither goest thou ? and whence comest thou ?" (tēlēk—tāvō).

I. Samuel xxviii. 16. "Wherefore then dost thou ask of me ?" (tisālēnī).

Gen. xv. 13. "Thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs" (yihyeh). The words "thy seed" suggest a future time, being addressed to a man who at the time has no child.

Exod. ix. 5. "To-morrow the Lord shall do this thing" (ya'āseh).

b. Deut. iii. 9, E.V. "Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion" (yikrēū), i.e. they call it so from time to time whenever they have occasion to speak of it.

I. Kings v. 25, Heb. (v. 11, E.V.). "Thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year" (yittēn).

Numb. xi. 5, E.V. "We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely" (nōkal). The past time is supplied by the words "in Egypt." The eating was an act recurring from time to time—at meal-times, or when hunger returned.

c. Prov. xi. 4. "Riches profit not in the day of wrath (i.e. whenever wrath falleth upon man) ; but righteousness delivereth from death (i.e. delivereth whenever death is imminent)" (lo-yō'il—taṣṣīl).

d. Thus the Imperfect is regularly used after the words im (if), pen (lest), lē-ma an (to the intent), ki (in case).

e. "Thou shalt not steal" (lō tignōv). "Fear thou not" (al-tīrā).

PERFECT.

3. The Perfect is used, in independent sentences or clauses, to express (a) states, conditions or relations which are regarded as complete and abiding, belonging to no particular point or interval of time; (b) states of the human mind and feelings, habits or customs, course of life; (c) offices, functions, or permanent relations; (d) facts regarded as complete, and entirely past; (e) facts regarded as absolutely certain to happen.

EXAMPLES.

a. Psalm civ. 1. "O Lord; Thou art very great. Thou art clothed with honour and majesty" (gādaltā—lāvāstā).

b. Psalm cxix. 113, 114. "I hate vain thoughts, but Thy law do I love. I hope in thy word" (šānēṭī—āhavtī—yīḡālti).

Ps. i. 1. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful" (lō hālak—āmad—yāṣav).

I. Sam. ii. 13, 14. "The priest's custom with the people was—when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servants came with a flesh-hook, and he struck it into the pan" (vā—hikkāh).

c. II. Kings ix. 13. "Then they hasted, and blew with a trumpet, saying, Jehu is king" (mālak).

Deut. viii. 19, E. V. "I testify (am a witness) against you this day" (ha'idōti).

d. I. Sam. vii. 12, E. V. "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us" (azārānū).

Deut. v. 2-4. "The Lord made a covenant with us in Horeb" (kāraθ—bērīθ). "The Lord talked with you, in the mount" (dibber).

In these verses a past time is indicated by referring to Horeb and to the mount.

Joshua xxiv. 2, E. V. "Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time" (yāševū).

e. I. Sam. ii. 31. "Behold the days come that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thy house" (gāda'ti).

I. Kings xiii. 2. "O altar, altar, thus saith the Lord; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer" (nōlād—wě-zāvaχ).

4. In order to make the meaning and effect of these two forms of the Verb more manifest, it is desirable to compare the uses of the two forms in cases where both belong to the same root.

For example, compare the Imperfect and Perfect of the root bā, in Judges xix. 16, 17; and in Gen. xvi. 8. In the former passage the wayfaring man is moving on from one place to another, one action still continuing. So the Imperfect is used (tēlēk—tāvō). Whereas in Gen. xvi. 8, Hagar is resting by a fountain. One action is complete; another has to begin. The Perfect is used of the former; the Imperfect of the latter (vāθ—tēlēki).

So likewise as to the root amar.

In II. Kings xx. there are narrated two conversations between King Hezekiah and the prophet Isaiah: one in vv. 8-10; and the other in vv. 14-19. In both cases the narrative takes the ordinary shape: the words of each speaker being given in their due order, and the Imperfect being used. But in the preceding chapter we find that certain persons were sent to deliver a message from the king to the prophet: "And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah" (v. 3). Here the Perfect is used. The act of speaking is not thought of, but only the fact that these are words which express the mind of the king, a royal and weighty message. So the prophet answers (v. 6), "Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the Lord," using also on his part the Perfect, meaning "This is the Divine message in answer to that of the king."

So as to the verb shāfat to judge.

Exod. xviii. 25-26, lit. "Then Moses chooses able men. And they judge the people at all times. The hard causes they bring unto Moses, but every small matter they judge themselves" (shāfētū—yēviūn—yishpūtū). Here Moses appoints certain men, and these men, being so appointed, are judges, and habitually exercise the function of judges.

This custom or function is expressed by the Perfect (wě-shāfētū). In the course of this function, from time to time they carry some causes to Moses, the others they settle. If a cause be difficult, they carry it to Moses; if plain, they settle it themselves. These last acts are therefore properly expressed by an Imperfect.

SUBJOINED PERFECT.

5. It is sometimes needful to enumerate several successive acts which, taken together, make up one proceeding or transaction, or are subordinate to one end or purpose. In such cases all the verbs subsequent to the first are in the Perfect, wě being prefixed to each Perfect. The first verb, taken with the context, having sufficiently shown the nature and circumstances of the transaction and the time thereof, all that remains is to designate the several steps in their order, and to indicate the close connexion of each step with the steps preceding. This is done by recurring to the Perfect, which, being the more simple and radical form of the Verb, is fitly used to express the action of the Verb per se. Such Perfects are hereafter spoken of as subjoined Perfects.

Such an enumeration may form part of (a) a command, (b) a law, (c) a narrative, (d) a question, or (e) a dependent or hypothetical clause.

It is not necessary in these cases that the subjects or agents of the several verbs so put in the Perfect remain so throughout. They may be varied without affecting the operation of the rule.

Sometimes, in enumerating the parts of the transaction itself, it is found convenient to mention some secondary or collateral act appertaining to the transaction. For this purpose, the sequence of Perfects is interrupted, and a parenthesis inserted; in such case, the wě which introduces the parenthesis is coupled, not with the verb, but with a noun or pronoun, and the verb is put in the Imperfect. This Imperfect, being now the verb of a direct and independent clause and relating to a transaction yet unbegun, is to be taken as a future.

EXAMPLES.

a. Levit. xviii. 2. "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them" (dabbēr—wě-āmartā).

Genesis xxvii. 43, 44. "Flee thou to Laban—and tarry with him" (bēraχ-lě-kā—wě-yasavtā).

Judges vi. 25, 26, lit. "Take thy father's bullock and throw down the altar of Baal—(and the grove that is by it thou shalt cut down)—and build an altar unto the Lord, and take the second bullock and offer a burnt sacrifice" (kaχ—wě-hārāstā—(wě-eθ-hā-āserāh—tikroθ)—ū-vanīθa—wě-lākaχtā—wě-ha·aliθā).

Here the object directly contemplated is the destruction of the idol-altar, and the substitution of an altar unto the Lord, and the offering of a sacrifice thereon. In carrying out this purpose, there is an opportunity for further dishonouring the idol-worship, and thereby providing wood for the sacrifice. This, being a secondary and subordinate part of the transaction, is placed in a parenthesis.

Exodus xl. 2-13. "On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle—and thou shalt put therein the ark—and cover the ark—and thou shalt bring in the table and set in order—” (tākīm—wě-śamtā—wě-sakkōṭā—wě-hēvēṭā—wě-āraktā, etc.).

This example, on account of its length, is not here set fully out. It extends from v. 2 to v. 13.

The acts here commanded had for their object the completion on one day of all the preparations needful in order to the carrying out of the sacrificial system. All were subordinate to that one end. Accordingly every step after the first is indicated by a Perfect with wě prefixed.

b. Leviticus i. 3-9. “He shall offer it at the door of the tabernacle, and he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering, and it shall be accepted. And he shall kill the bullock, and the priests shall bring the blood and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar, and he shall slay the burnt-offering and cut it into pieces, and the sons of Aaron shall put fire upon the altar and lay the wood in order. And the priests shall lay the parts in order upon the wood, (but his inwards—shall he wash in water) and the priest shall burn all upon the altar” (yākriṽ—wě-sāmak—wě-niṣrāh—wě-sāḫat—wě-hikriṽ—wě-zārekū—wě-hiṣit—wě-nittax—wě-nāṭēnū—wě-ārēkū—wě-ārēkū (wě-kirb-ō—yirḫaṣ) wě-hiktir).

In this example a parenthesis is introduced relating to a special act which the priest is to perform in reference not to the whole offering, but to one part only of it.

c. Genesis ii. 6. “There went up a mist and watered the ground” (ēd yaʾāleh—wě-hiskāh).

Genesis xl. 19. "Within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thine head, and shall hang thee—and the birds shall eat thy flesh" (yiśśā P.—wě-θālāh—wě-ākal).

Joshua xv. 2-4. "Their south border was from the shore of the salt sea, and it went out to the south side to M. and passed along to Z. and ascended up unto K. and passed along to H. and went up to A. and fetches a compass to Ka: it passed towards A. and went out unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out were at the sea" (wa-ihī—wě-yāšā—wě-āvar—wě-ālāh—wě-āvar—wě-ālāh—wě-nāsav—wě-āvar—wě-yāšā—wě-hāyāh).

Here one continuous boundary line is traced from spot to spot through its whole length.

d. Exod. ii. 7. "Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women?" (ha-ēlēk—wě-kāraθī?).

e. Deut. viii. 1. "All the commandments shall ye observe to do, that ye may live and multiply and go in and possess the land" (lē-ma'an tiχyūn ū-rěvīθem ū-vāθem w-irishtem).

Genesis xxviii. 20, 21. "If God will be with me, and will keep me in the way that I go, and will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, and I come again to my father's house, then," etc. (im yihyeh—ū-sēmārānī—wě-nāθan—wě-savtī).

It is scarcely necessary to remark that the foregoing examples under this rule are sufficient of themselves to show that a notion of past time cannot be inherent in the Perfect as such.

PARTICLE OF CONNEXION.

6. The particle we, commonly rendered by and, in its ordinary use connects objects present at the same time, or acts which are either simultaneous or at least closely connected with one another.

This particle does not indicate any change of time. It has in itself no reference to time. It is true that, in an enumeration of acts forming several parts of one transaction, the several stages do belong to different points of time. This however is not shown by the particle, but rather by the nature of the steps or stages, of which each one as it comes into existence shows the before-mentioned steps or stages to have been completed.

7. In order to express the close connexion of two acts, or the immediate dependence of one act upon another, the dependent act is put in the Imperfect, we being prefixed immediately to the Imperfect.

In sentences of this class the modes of connexion or dependence are various, each of which has in English its appropriate form of expression. In Hebrew the one method, by the use of we prefixed to the Imperfect, is made to serve all these purposes. Occasionally other forms of speech are resorted to, but as a general rule this form is employed. The nature of the acts indicated by the verbs; the relation between the persons who are the subjects or agents of the verbs; these and other points mentioned or suggested by the context supply a sufficient guide to the meaning.

a. In some cases, the connexion is so close that the dependent act is involved in the fact or supposition stated in the former clause.

EXAMPLES.

Numb. xxiii. 19. "God is not a man that he should lie, neither a son of man that he should repent" (w-ikazzēv—wě-yiθnēχām).

I. Samuel xii. 3. "Of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith?" (wě-ālīm).

I. Kings xxii. 7, E. V. "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we may inquire of him?" (wě-nidrēsāh), i.e. if there be such a prophet, of course we shall inquire of him.

Psalms li. 18. "Thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it" (wě-ettēnāh).

b. In others, the dependent verb expresses the purport and object of the act expressed by the verb in the former clause.

Exodus vi. 11. "Speak unto Pharaoh that he let the children of Israel go" (w-isallaχ).

Exodus x. 17, E. V. "Entreat the Lord, that he take away from me this death" (wě-yāsēr).

Exodus ii. 7. "Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee" (wě-θēnik).

I. Kings xiii. 33, E. V. "Whosoever would, Jeroboam consecrated him that he might become one of the priests of the high places" (w-ihī).

c. In other cases a command or prayer is followed by a clause expressing a result of such command being obeyed or prayer granted.

Gen. xii. 1, 2. "Get thee out of thy country, and I will make of thee a great nation" (wě-e.ěs-kā).

Psalm cxix. 144. "Give me understanding and I shall live" (wě-eḫyeh).

I. Sam. vii. 3. "Prepare your hearts unto the Lord and serve Him only: and He will deliver you" (wě-yassēl).

8. When a statement of a condition or supposition is followed by a statement of some result to follow closely upon the fulfilment of that condition, the verb which expresses the result is in the Perfect form, and is preceded by wě. The result necessarily belongs to the future time at which the specified condition shall be fulfilled.

EXAMPLES.

Genesis xxviii. 20, 21. "If God will be with me and will keep me and will give me bread to eat, etc., then shall the Lord be my God" (wě-hāyāh).

Numbers xxvii. 8. "If a man die and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter" (wě-ha'āvartem).

The same construction recurs in vv. 9, 10, 11.

In the following and similar cases, the supposition is not put in express words, but clearly implied.

Genesis xviii. 25. "That be far from Thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked. (If Thou do so), then happeneth (this state of things), as the righteous, so the wicked" (wě-hāyāh).

Exodus xxxiii. 16. "Wherein shall it be known that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that Thou goest with us? (If Thou so goest with us), then are we separated from all "the people upon the face of the earth" (wě-niflinū).

II. Sam. xiv. 7. "They said, Deliver him that smote his brother that we may kill him, and so (i.e. if they kill him) they shall quench my coal which is left" (wě-kibbū).

PARTICLE OF SEQUENCE.

9. Whenever past events are narrated in due order, the sequence is indicated by prefixing the conjunction wa to the several verbs which express those events, each verb being put in the Imperfect form. The wa in every such case marks a new time, the commencement of a new act or event. It shows that the act expressed by the verb to which it is prefixed is later in time than the act indicated by the last preceding verb having wa similarly prefixed. It expresses sequence, and nothing more: the interval between the acts may be of the shortest or the longest.

The wa should be understood as equivalent to after that, thereupon, so, then.

Of this structure, examples are found in every part of the historical books. It should be noticed that the first letter of the Imperfect following the wa is doubled, e.g. wai-yōmer—wat-tōmer.

The following examples will show clearly the use of this particle as contrasted with the particle of connexion.

I. Kings i. 33-35. "The king said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon to ride upon my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon : And let Zadok anoint him there king over Israel, and blow ye with the trumpet; and say, God save the king " (wě-hirkavtem—wě-hōradtem—ū-māsaχ—ū-θēka.tem).

Ib. 38, 39. "So Zadok and Nathan went down and caused Solomon to ride upon king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon. And Zadok anointed Solomon, and they blew the trumpet, and all the people said, God save king Solomon " (wai-yarkivū — wai-yōlikū — wai-yimsaχ—wai-yiθkē.ū—wai-yōmērū).

In I. Sam. ix. 27, the Imperfect of the verb āvar occurs twice: once with the wě, the second time with the wa prefixed. Samuel said to Saul, "Speak to the servant that he pass on " (wě-ya.āvōr). "Then the servant passed on " (wai-ya.āvōr).

10. The use of this idiom is not confined to narratives of a strictly historical kind. It extends to narratives of every kind: to Jotham's similitude (Judges ix. 8—15); to Nathan's parable (II. Sam. xii. 1—4); as well as to a narrative given by a prophet of matters which passed before him in vision (I. Kings xxii. 19—23).

It is used also for the purpose of setting forth facts, not as occurring at a specified time, but as recurring from time to time whenever the like circumstances recur; and that not only in respect of physical sequences or consequences, but also in respect of those of a moral kind.

Thus Proverbs xi. 2: When pride is come, then cometh shame " (wai-yāvō).

11. In poetry, the wa of sequence may be omitted, and the Imperfect alone used: e.g. Exodus xv. 12. "Thou stretchedst out thy right hand, the earth swallowed them" (tivlā.ēmū).

BREACH OF SEQUENCE.

12. When it is found necessary to interrupt the orderly course of a narrative for the purpose of mentioning some fact contemporaneous with some fact already narrated, or which may serve to explain or to enlarge upon something previously stated, the breach in the sequence of the narrative is indicated by a very simple device. The structure is suddenly changed: the wa and its Imperfect disappear. The new sentence begins with wě, but this wě is prefixed, not to the leading verb, but to a noun or pronoun; and the leading verb of the new sentence is put in the Perfect.

EXAMPLES.

Judges iii. 25, 26. "Therefore they tarried till they were ashamed—then they took their key, and opened the door. But Ehud escaped while they tarried" (wai-yāχīlū—wai-yikχū—wai-yiftaχū—wě-Ehūd nimlat).

Numbers xxiv. 25. "Then Balaam rose up and went and returned to his place, and Balak also went his way" (wai-yākōm—wai-yēlek—wai-yāshōv—wě-gam Bālak—hālak). That is to say, the journey of Balak took place not after that of Balaam, but during the same time.

Judges ix. 51—54. "Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped against Thebez, and took it. (But there was a strong tower within the city) and thither fled all the men and women, and shut it to them and gat them up to the top. And Abimelech came unto the tower" (wai-yēlek—wai-yiḥan—wai-yilkēdāh (ū-migdal ʾōz hāyāh—)wai-yānusū—wai-yisgērū—wai-yaʾlū—wai-yāvō).

I. Samuel ix. 14, 15. "And they went up Saul and the servant into the city, and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out. Now the Lord had told Samuel a day before Saul came, saying," etc. (wai-yaʾlū—wě-Y. gālāh).

II. Samuel xviii. 18. "Now Absalom in his life-time had taken and reared up for himself a pillar" (wě-Absalom lākaḥ).

13. It has already been stated that wa, as a Particle of Sequence, occurs before the Imperfect Form only. But there are apparent exceptions—that is to say, there are cases in which wa is found before other parts of the verb, and even before nouns. In all such instances, the wa is a disguised form of the particle wě. For it is a rule of the language that wě (and all other similar particles, such as bě, lē, etc.) must undergo this change, when they stand immediately before a word beginning with Alef or any aspirated letter. Then the wě becomes wa, and in like manner bě and lē become ba and la. In certain cases they even become wā, bā, and lā.

By the operation of this rule, the Particle of Sequence becomes subject to one change: it becomes wā before the 1st person singular of the Imperfect which begins with Alef. Thus, in I. Sam. xiii. 12, we observe three instances of this change in one verse: wā-ōmar—wā-eṯappak— wā-a.āleh. But these are matters of euphony, not of grammar, and do not further concern us in this inquiry.

14. It is not meant to be asserted that the rule as to this Particle of Sequence is so rigidly observed as never to be broken—at least, apparently. It is not maintained that every sentence commencing with the wa and the Imperfect does in fact indicate a time later than every similar sentence which occurs before it in the text. The Hebrew writers used the freedom of a simple and in-artificial style; and in the writings of which the volume of Scripture is composed, proceeding from many hands and having passed through many generations, some irregularities are to be expected. There are cases where the narrator returns to a prior point in his narrative, as at Genesis v. 24, where some of the words of verse 22 are repeated: and again at Judges ii. 6, where the very words of Joshua xxiv. 28 are repeated, with some addition: and at Judges ii. 7, where the words of Joshua xxiv. 31 are repeated in like manner. Sometimes the writer appears to go back to a point already reached and passed, for the purpose of supplying details not yet stated, e.g. II. Sam. iv. 5—7. Sometimes the order appears to be thrown wrong by way of parenthesis or a later insertion, as in the passage Joshua iv. 11—18. In I. Kings xiii. 12 (wai-yirū), where the rendering “had seen” is untenable, the LXX. must have read (wai-yarū).

But irregularities of this kind are not of such a kind or so numerous as to throw any doubt upon the rule;

which, with these exceptions and some few others of the like kind, is observed throughout the historical books.

CONCURRENT FACTS.

15. In order to indicate that two states or events are concurrent, or immediately connected, the clauses expressing the two are put in the same grammatical form, and placed side by side.

EXAMPLES.

Exodus xvi. 21. "As the sun waxed hot, it (the manna) melted" (wě-ḡam—wě-nāmas).

I. Sam. ix. 17. "And as soon as Samuel saw Saul, the Lord said unto him" (ū-S. rāāh—wa-Y. ānāh-ū).

I. Kings xiv. 17. "As she came to the threshold, the child died" (hī bāāh—wě-han-na'ar mēθ).

Gen. xliv. 3. "As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away" (hab-bōker ōr, wě-hā-anāsīm sullēḡū).

II. Sam. vi. 16. E.V. "And as the ark of the Lord came into the city, Michal looked down," lit. and it came to pass (this was the state of things). The ark was come into the city, and Michal looked down (wě-hāyāh—ārōn Y. bā—ū. M. niskēfāh).

16. There are various passages in which the grammatical form remains the same as in the foregoing examples, but much more than mere concurrence of events is implied. In these cases the further meaning is suggested by a consideration of the relation subsisting between the person speaking and the person addressed.

Judges vii. 18, E. V. "When I blow with a trumpet, then blow ye the trumpets also." (i.e. "When I (your commander) blow, then it is your duty to blow also.") (wě-θāka.tī—ānōkī—u-θēka.tem gam-attem).

II. Kings v. 6. sālaytī—wa-āsaft-ō (wa instead of we before Alef). Lit. "I send Naaman unto thee, and thou recoverest him from his leprosy," i.e. "When I require thee to do this thing, it is thy business to do it." The superiority of the King of Syria at that time appears from verses 1, 2 and 6.

A similar construction is found at II. Kings x. 2, 3.

These examples appear to explain the structure of the passage in Deuteronomy xxx. 19. "Life and death I place before thy face—and thou choosest life." i.e. "When I, the lawgiver, set life and death before thee, then thou (as in duty bound) choosest life."

PRECATIVE FORM.

17. A precative or optative sense is given to the Imperfect by placing it at the commencement of the sentence, and placing the noun which expresses the subject or agent of the Imperfect immediately after it.

EXAMPLES.

Judges xi. 37. "Let this thing be done" (yē-āseh—had-dāvār haz-zeh).

Numbers vi. 24—26. "The Lord bless thee—the Lord make his face to shine upon thee—the Lord lift up the light of his countenance" (yěvārek-kā Y.—yāer Y.—yiśśā Y.).

II. Kings xi. 12. "Long live the King" (yěχī ham-melek).

Judges xvi. 30. "Let me die with the Philistine" (tāmōθ nafs-ī).

Genesis xvi. 5. "The Lord judge between me and thee" (yispōt Y.).

There are, however, cases where the subject of the verb is put in the first place, the speaker seeming to pause upon it with an emphasis before he utters his prayer concerning it, e.g. Psalm cix. 6. "Set thou a wicked man over him—and Satan—let him stand at his right hand" (wě-Sātān—ya.āmōd).

After a verb in the Imperative or Precative form, the second person of the Imperfect is often used in a Precative sense.

EXAMPLES.

Psalm lxviii. 3. "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered: As smoke is driven away, so drive Thou them away" (tindōf).

Proverbs vii. 1. "My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee" (semōr—tiṣfōn).

18. In I. Samuel xx. 16, there is a singular instance of a Perfect placed before a noun to express a prayer. "So Jonathan made a covenant with the house of David, saying, 'Let the Lord even require it at the hand of David's enemies,' i.e. require the due penalty for the evil which David's enemies are supposed to be doing at the time of uttering the prayer" (ū-vikkēs Y.). This may be compared with similar forms in Arabic, e.g. tabāraka

'llahu, which seem to be used for the purpose of expressing a pious wish for the continuance of some existing state of things.

PARTICIPLE.

19. The Participle so-called resembles the Perfect inasmuch as it couples with some person or subject the action or condition expressed by the root, without conveying in itself any notion of time past, present, or future. It differs from the Perfect inasmuch as it does not assert or predicate, but only describes. It is the nomen agentis or nomen patientis of Arabic Grammars.

EXAMPLES.

Proverbs xx. 12. "The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them" (sōma·aθ—rōāh), i.e. the ear, which possesses the faculty of hearing, and the eye, which possesses the faculty of seeing.

Prov. xx. 11. "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer" (hak-kōneh).

Gen. i. 6. "Let there be a firmament—and let it be a divider—between waters and waters" (mavdīl).

Exodus xx. 12 (Deut. v. 16). "The land which the Lord giveth thee (lit. of which the Lord is giver)" (nōθēn). This form seems to be intended to suggest as a motive to obedience the relation subsisting (apart from all considerations of time) between the Author of the law and his people. He who gives the law, and requires obedience thereto from the dwellers in the land, is also the giver of the land on which they dwell.

In the case of the Participle, as in the case of the Perfect, the notion of the time past, present, or future, to which the act or condition belongs, is to be gathered from the context.

Numbers xxxiii. 3, 4. "The children of Israel went out with a high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians: For the Egyptians were burying all their first-born" (mēkabbērīm).

Joshua iii. 17. "And the priests that bare the ark—stood firm on dry ground—whilst all the Israelites were passing over" (wě-kol I. —.ōvērīm).

HEBREW NARRATIVE.

20. In comparing the structure of the Verb in the Hebrew and in other Semitic languages with the structure of the Verb in the cultivated languages of the West, we are struck by the fewness of the grammatical forms employed by the former class; and we are apt to wonder, how so scanty an outfit was made to meet the requirements of human discourse. In considering this question, we confine ourselves to the case of narratives of past events.

The chief cause then seems to lie in the mental habits of the speakers of the language.

Our habit is to refer all the parts of every narrative to one fixed centre; namely, to the narrator himself in each case, however remote he may be in time from the facts he is narrating. From the time at which he speaks, or writes, he travels back in mind to the facts narrated. He not only indicates in the outset that the facts stated belong to the past time, but goes on repeating that indication with every new fact in the series narrated.

Moreover, we are apt in our written narratives to gather the events which we narrate into groups, each group having for its centre some person, from whose stand-point we look before and after. We not only indicate the place of that central figure as in the past, but upon every motive or remembrance, and even upon every hope or fear which we assign to him, we think it necessary to set a further mark showing that to us all is past.

The Hebrew narrator proceeds on a different plan. He begins by indicating once for all that he is about to speak of a past time. This he does either by expressly mentioning the past time to which his narrative belongs, or by naming some person, or event which his hearers know beforehand to belong to the past time.

21. By way of Preface, he sets forth the state of facts as existing at the time of the commencement of his intended narrative, so far as may be needed to make that narrative intelligible. These facts are viewed only as being the facts out of which the narrative takes its rise. The course of things by which those facts came into being, their relations in time to each other, these matters lie outside of the purpose and business of the narrator. The facts are viewed simply as co-existing at the outset of the narrative, and are therefore connected together by means of the ordinary conjunction we. In these prefaces there is no dependence of the acts or conditions therein mentioned upon one another; the wē being prefixed in each case, not to a verb, but to a noun.

For example, Gen. i. 1. This was the state of things when the course of events about to be narrated commenced. Heaven and earth, the work of God, were in existence; the earth was waste—darkness was upon the deep—the Spirit of God was moving upon the waters. This preface being comprised in verses 1-2, the narrative begins in v. 3. "Thereupon (or then) God saith," etc.

Genesis xxiv. 1, 2. The first verse is a preface to the narrative which follows. 1. "Now Abraham was old and well stricken in age: and the Lord had blessed Abraham in all things." Then the narrative commences. 2. "Thereupon Abraham saith unto his eldest servant," etc.

Gen. xxxvii. 2. The former part of the verse is a preface, the narrative beginning with the last clause: "Then Joseph bringeth unto his father."

22. And this practice of introducing a regular narrative by a short preface is resorted to not only at the beginning of a distinct narrative, but also at the beginning of separate paragraphs in the narrative. The prefatory clause merely indicates that a certain fact once took place—then the sequence of certain other facts is stated. Taken together, a sentence thus formed is equivalent to a Latin sentence introduced by some conjunction, such as quum, postquam, or the like, or by a so-called ablative absolute.

EXAMPLES.

Gen. xli. 10. "Pharaoh, being wroth with his servants, put me in ward" (kāṣaf—wai-yittēn).

I. Samuel xxviii. 3. "Samuel being dead (or after Samuel was dead) Israel lamented." Lit. "Now Samuel was dead, thereupon all Israel laments him, and buries him in Ramah" (ū-S. mēθ, wai-yispēdū). At chap. xxv. 1, where the statement of Samuel's death came in its proper place in the narrative, the usual form was employed (viz. wai-yāmōθ).

II. Sam. xix. 40. "And when the king was come over, the king kissed Barzillai" (wē-ham-melek āvar, wai-yissak).

23. Then the speaker commences his narrative with the conjunction of sequence wa which shows only this, that the action denoted by the verb to which it was prefixed was later in time than the facts stated in the preface. Suppose a man to be relating some occurrence which he has witnessed, his first object is to put his hearer as far as possible in the position which he himself occupied at the time of the occurrence, to make his hearer see and hear what he himself saw and heard, and in the same order. He does not gather the facts he has to tell into artificial groups, but recounts them one by one, each in its place as it occurred. He connects them by a conjunction, which indicates that each act or event expressed by the verb to which that conjunction is prefixed is in order of time later than the act or event expressed by the verb to which the like conjunction is prefixed in the clause immediately before it. The very words of each speaker are repeated. His thoughts also are given as words—as what "he said in his heart." Thus the story flows on. No reference is made to time, except so far as the particle wa indicates sequence. Each incident of the narrative, each agent or speaker that takes part in it, is brought before the hearer in due order, just as if a roll containing a series of pictures representing them in their proper places were gradually unrolled before his eyes. Thus each incident in its turn becomes present, and moves on with the words of the narrator. The narrative sets forth a series of present acts, and is not complicated by any reference to the later time at which the story is related, or to times which were future to the persons mentioned in the course of the narrative.

This habit of mind being common to both narrator and hearer, the simple forms of the Hebrew verbs supply all that is needed.

24. This original form fitly corresponded to the oral narratives of contemporary events, with which earlier and simpler races would have chiefly to do. Afterwards it came to be used as a mode of writing history: for it was a clear, lively, and intelligible mode of conveying the story of the past as well as of the present. It continued to be the only form of narration through the period in which the books were written, from which our examples are taken.

Our own habits of speech do not allow us to follow the Hebrew usage in our versions; but, in order to understand the construction of the language, it is needful to bear this usage in mind.

CHAPTER III.

GRAMMATICAL NOTES.

The object of these notes is to show how the general rules laid down in the preceding chapter are to be applied to the clearing up of grammatical difficulties in the Hebrew text. It is not intended to point out every passage to which the rules are applicable; but rather to select certain instances whereby the meaning and extent of the rules may be made clear, and the learner may be enabled to apply them for himself to other passages.

GENESIS—CHAPTER I.

vv. 14, 15. “Let there be lights in the firmament, and let them be for signs” (yehī—wě-hāyū). Here the latter clauses of a command are expressed by Perfects subjoined to an Imperfect.

v. 31. eθ-kol—āser āsāh: i.e., “Everything of which he was the maker—every created thing.” The words refer to the relation between the maker and the things made, not to time.

CHAPTER II.

v. 10. yippārēd — wě-hāyāh. “The stream at that point is divided, and in dividing becomes,” etc.; the division of the one stream and the formation of the four rivers being different stages of one natural operation.

CHAPTER IV.

v. 1. wě-hā-ādām yāda. These words are intended as an introduction or preface to a new narrative, which begins with wat-takar, and is carried on from stage to stage by the use of the same particle wa.

v. 14. hāyīθī and hāyāh are subjoined Perfects which indicate further stages in the process of departing from the presence of God.

CHAPTER V., verses 3-6.

Here we read that:—

v. 3. “Adam lived 130 years and begat Seth:”

v. 4. “And the days of Adam after he begat Seth were 800 years, and he begat sons and daughters:”

v. 5. “And all the days that Adam lived were 930, and he died.”

v. 6. “And Seth lived 105 years and begat Enos:”

Throughout these verses the word and represents the Hebrew ‘wa,’ which appears at first sight to indicate that all the facts narrated are represented as following one another in the order in which they are written. The birth of Enos would therefore appear to have taken place after the death of Adam. Yet this is contradicted by the narrative itself. Are we then to abandon the theory of the Vau of Sequence? By no means. The solution of the difficulty is this—that in pedigrees of this form there is a twofold sequence. One is a continuous lineal sequence from father to son, tracing the descent from eldest son to eldest son: the persons being all named. To set forth this sequence is the special purpose of the narrator. Besides this, there is a collateral sequence of events following the birth of the eldest son of each patriarch; the narrator taking care to mention in each case that besides the descendant named there were other descendants unnamed, and to state also the age of the patriarch at the time of his death. The former sequence is carried on through the verses 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, and so on; the latter, in the verses intervening between each couple of those numbers.

We should probably have separated these and have placed first the direct pedigree, and the other matters subsequently.

But the mode here used did not fail of being understood. Accordingly, in the Hebrew manuscripts, and in the printed text, the narrative is broken up into groups in such manner as that each group begins with the birth of the firstborn son of each patriarch, and ends with the death of that patriarch. A space is then left in the manuscript, and a symbol introduced to indicate that the sequence indicated by the first word of the next group is not an immediate sequence upon the clause preceding. This device of the Hebrew scribes is imitated by the paragraphs in our English Bible.

CHAPTER VI.

v. 21. āsafā. This Perfect, being subjoined to an Imperative, becomes an Imperative. So again in the third clause, wě-hāyāh. "And thou—take to thee of all food which is eaten, and gather it to thee—and be it to thee and to them for food."

CHAPTER VIII.

v. 17. hōṣē—wě-sārēṣū—ū-farū—wě-rāvū. "Bring forth—and let them breed—and be fruitful and multiply."

CHAPTER IX.

v. 16. wě-hāyēṯāh—ū-rēiṯi. "So soon as the bow is in the cloud, I look upon it to remember."

v. 26. w-ihī. "And let Canaan be his servant."

v. 27. yaft-Elōhīm. "May God enlarge—and may he dwell—and let Canaan be his servant."

CHAPTER X.

v. 8. wě-Kūs yālad eṯ Nimrōd. In this verse all that is asserted is the fact that Kush was father of Nimrod. There is no attempt to define the precise place of Nimrod in the historic series. So throughout this chapter.

CHAPTER XI.

v. 9. al-kēn kārā. "Therefore doth one call." The Perfect here indicates a custom.

vv. 10-26. Here we have a pedigree extending from Shem to Abram. It differs throughout from that in chap. v. in this respect, that there is no statement of the whole length of life or of the death of each patriarch. In the earlier part it differs also in another respect. In v. 12 and again in v. 14 the difficulty which was noticed in the notes on chap. v. arising from the use of the wa throughout, is avoided by a change of structure. The wa is dropped and the sequence manifestly broken, so as to leave no apparent contradiction. It is singular that in all the later parts of the narrative this device is not resorted to, but the form which has been considered above (chap. v. 3-6) is retained. Here, as before, the Hebrew editors of the text have, by spaces and symbols, marked the places where the sequence is not immediate.

CHAPTER XII.

v. 1. wai-yōmer. "Then saith the Lord."

Here again the difficulty of a double sequence presents itself. The direct sequence belongs to the life of Abram; which is the primary subject of the narrative. The sequence in the last verse of chap. xi. is a divergent or secondary one. In chap. xii. 1, the direct sequence is resumed.

v. 2. "And become a blessing" (hěyēh).

v. 12. kī yiru—wě-āmērū—wě-hārēgū-ōθī—wě-ōθāk yěχaiyu. "In case they see, then they will say—and will kill me, but thee they will save alive." After the word me (ōθī) the structure is varied: the dependence is severed, and the concluding clause takes the form of a direct and independent assertion; though, for the purpose of emphasis and contrast, the pronoun 'thee' (ōθāk) is transferred to the commencement of the clause.

v. 13. The Perfect χayěθāh is subjoined to the Imperfect yītāv.

CHAPTER XIII.

vv. 5, 6. These two verses are a preface, introduced to indicate the state of things at the time when the strife about to be indicated arose.

vv. 11, 12. wai-yippārēdū—yāsav—wě-yāsav. The Perfects are used not to express any new fact, but simply to explain the word yippārēdū.

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 16. The Perfect hēšhiv follows the time of yāsev, no other time being indicated.

CHAPTER XV.

v. 6. wě-heēmin. "And at the time last mentioned, whilst he was hearing the words spoken, he believed."

CHAPTER XVII.

vv. 5-8. The Imperfect yikkārē belongs to a future time, as shown by the word .ōd. To this Imperfect are subjoined, in v. 6, hifrēθī—nēθattī; in v. 7, hākimōθī; in v. 8, nēθattī; and finally, hāyiθī. All these Perfects mark successive stages in the transaction or history. The last clause of v. 6, "even kings out of thee shall come," is an independent clause, by way of parenthesis.

v. 19. wě-kārāθā. "And thou shalt call." The time of calling being already fixed in the reference to a son yet to be born.

CHAPTER XVIII.

v. 19. lě-ma'an hāvī. "To the end that the Lord may be the bringer of all," etc. The Perfect here expresses not any specific act, but a permanent relation.

v. 25. wě-hāyāh. “So that the state of things be this: as the righteous, so the wicked.”

CHAPTER XIX.

v. 3. wai ya-as misteh—u-maṣṣoθ āfāh—misteh refers only to that which was to be drunk, and not to that which was to be eaten; therefore, to mark the two distinct operations, the wě of the latter clause is not prefixed to the verb, but to the noun.

CHAPTER XX.

v. 6. wā-exsōk. “And so (thereupon) I withheld thee.”

v. 7. wě-χěyeh. “And (so doing) live.”

CHAPTER XXI.

vv. 24, 25. wai-yōmer A.—wě-hokiaχ A. “Then Abraham said—and Abraham reproved.” The reproof was not part of a prior or other transaction, but of the same transaction of which the narration commences in v. 22. Abraham takes the oath required of him against wrongful dealing on his part, and goes on to complain of wrongful dealing on the part of Abimelech. The words of the oath are given expressly, “I swear”; of the reproof, the substance only is given. Both the oath and the reproof were comprised in one unbroken discourse. This is indicated by the use of the subjoined Perfect.

CHAPTER XXIII.

v. 4. ekborāh. “Let me bury.”

vv. 11-13. In v. 11, by the word nāθattī Ephron expresses, not a single act, but the relation which he bears to the other party in the transaction: “The field I give

—I am a giver.” In like manner, in v. 13, Abraham describes his part by the form nāḥattī kesef. “I am a giver of silver. I purchase for money. I do not take it on any other terms.”

CHAPTER XXIV.

v. 14. wě-hāyāh. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperative hakreh-nā in v. 12, and takes thence a precative sense.

v. 29. Here the sequence is broken; and a fact already existing is stated, as an introduction to the following narrative.

CHAPTER XXV.

v. 5. The narrative interrupted at v. 3 is here resumed. The vv. 3-4 are a parenthesis, giving some further information as to the family of Keturah.

CHAPTER XXVI.

v. 3. wě-ehyeh. “I will be with thee.” A promise following a command. In vv. 3-4 the first stage in the train of promised blessing is expressed by the Imperfect ettēn; the latter stages, by the subjoined Perfects ḡakīmōḡi—hirbēḡi—nāḥattī—hiḡbārēkū.

v. 5. wai-yismōr. “Not only heard my commandments, but went on to keep them.”

CHAPTER XXVII.

v. 6. The sequence is here broken, to show that the discourse of the mother to her favourite son began before Esau had gone forth.

v. 15. "anōkī immāk ū-sēmartī. "I (will be) with thee and keep thee."

CHAPTER XXIX.

v. 2. yasku. This form is here used to express an act performed from time to time. The context shows it to be past.

v. 3. wě-neesfū — wě-gālēlū — wě-hiskū — wě-hēsivū. Concurrent Perfects. "Whenever the flocks were gathered, then they rolled away the stone, and watered the sheep and put the stone again in his place."

v. 26. Lit. "It is not done so in our place, to give the younger before the elder."

vv. 16, 17. These two verses are a preface or introduction to the narrative which commences in v. 18.

CHAPTER XXX.

v. 25. "Send me away, and let me go" (elkāh).

v. 27. niḡastī wa-ivāarak-ēnī. "I was an observer, then (after that time) the Lord blessed me for thy sake"; i.e., "from the time at which I began to observe, the Lord hath been blessing me for thy sake."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

v. 13. ū-dēfākū-m — wā-meθū. Concurrent Perfects. "When they overdrive—then they die"; i.e., overdriving will be their death.

CHAPTER XXXV.

v. 3. hā-ōneh ōθī — wa-yēhī immādī. Lit. "Who answered me, and then became with me (i.e., thenceforward became my companion and guide) in the journey." Compare chap. xxviii. 20.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

v. 19. bā. "Is come."

v. 15. hārīmōṭī kōl-i—wā-ekrā. First came a scream or loud cry, then an articulate call for help. wā for wa before Alef.

CHAPTER XL.

vv. 13-14. "Thou wilt return to thy former office; not that only, but thou wilt moreover remember me." The form kī-im appears to add something positive to a preceding negative statement, or something specific to a preceding general statement.

v. 22. wē-lō zākar—wai-yiskāḥ-ēhu. i.e., The chief butler did not at the time of his restoration to his office remember Joseph, and after a time he forgot him altogether.

CHAPTER XLI.

v. 30. āḥarē-hen. These words give a future time to kāmū. "After the seven years of plenty, there shall arise seven years of famine."

CHAPTER XLIII.

v. 14. wē-El-Shaddai—yitten. A pause is to be made after the Divine name: "God Almighty—may He give."

A similar instance occurs in verse 29.

CHAPTER XLIV.

v. wa-ḥappēs—hēḫēl—killāh. The Perfects indicate, not a new act, but the mode in which the act expressed by the Imperfect was performed.

v. 33. wě-han-na-ar ya-al. "And the lad—let him go up."

CHAPTER XLV.

v. 10. "Come down hither—and dwell." The Perfect yāsavtā is subjoined to the Imperative rēdāh in verse 9.

v. 13. "And tell." This Perfect higgadtem follows āmartem in verse 9; and, like that, is subjoined to ʾālū in the same verse.

Verse 12 is a parenthesis.

CHAPTER XLVII.

v. 30. wě-sākavtī—u-něsāṭa-nī. "But let me lie with my fathers, and do thou carry me out of Egypt." These Perfects are subjoined to the Precative in the preceding verse.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

vv. 15, 16. "God—the God which hath fed me—may He bless the lads."

v. 21. "I die, and (when I die) then shall come to pass this state of things—namely, God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers."

EXODUS—CHAPTER III.

v. 10. "I send thee unto Pharaoh, and bring thou forth my people."

v. 18. wě-nizbēṣāh. "And let us sacrifice."

v. 20. wě-salaxtī. "Then (when the king refuses to let you go) will I stretch out my hand."

CHAPTER IV.

v. 8. wě-hāyāh. This verb takes a future time from the words, "if they will not believe."

v. 14. wě-rāa-kā—wě-sāmaχ. "And when he seeth thee, he will be glad." Concurrent Perfects.

vv. 21-23. "When thou goest to return into Egypt, see, all the wonders which I have put into thy hand, then (when thou art come into Egypt) shalt thou do them before Pharaoh. Thou shalt say, Thus saith (koh āmar) the Lord (this is the message, or purpose, of the Lord), Israel is my son. So (in consequence of this being so) I say to thee, Let my son go; thereupon thou refusest, behold, I slay thy son." At the time when the punishment, announced in the concluding words, takes effect, the command and the refusal to obey will be already past. Accordingly, they are stated in the ordinary form of a narrative of past events.

CHAPTER VI.

vv. 3-5. wā-ērā. The verb expresses simply the fact of appearing. The mention of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob suggests past time, and indicates that the appearance was repeated from time to time.

CHAPTER XII.

v. 4. wě-lākaχ. "And if the house be too little, then shall he and his neighbours take."

v. 13. wě-rāiθī—wě-pāsaχtī. "When (so soon as) I see—then I will pass over."

v. 22. ū-lēkaχtem. This Perfect and the others which follow in this verse are subjoined to the Imperative saχātū in v. 21. "Do this now, and further observe it as an ordinance for ever."

v. 23. wě-āvar. "Then (when the directions just given are carried out) will the Lord pass through."

v. 24. "ū-sēmartem. "And observe." This is the last in the train of Perfects subjoined to the Imperative saḫātū.

v. 27. "Then ye (shall) say."

CHAPTER XIII.

v. 5. "Then thou shalt keep this service."

CHAPTER XVII.

v. 9. Here niṣṣāv expresses, not a single act, but a state—not merely standing on the hill-top, but occupying a post there for an indefinite time, even so long as the battle might last.

v. 11. wě-hāyāh ka-āser yārīm—wě-gāvar. Lit. "And there becometh this state of things; whenever Moses lifts up his hands—then Israel prevails."

CHAPTER XVIII.

v. 8. wai-yassil-ēm. "All the trouble which came upon them, and then (after all) the Lord delivered them."

vv. 19-20. wě-hēvēṯā — wě-hizhartā — wě-hōdātā. All these Perfects are subjoined to the Imperative hēyēh. "Be (become) thou—and bring—and teach—and shew."

vv. 21-22. wě-samtā—wě-sāfētū. These Perfects are subjoined to the Imperfect θeḫḫezeh. "Moreover thou shalt provide—and shalt place—and they shall judge."

CHAPTER XXV.

v. 2. The whole passage from mē-ēθ kol-is to the end of v. 7, is a parenthesis.

v. 8. wē-āsū l-i mikdas wē-sākanti. The Perfect āsū is subjoined to the Imperative yikχū in v. 2. "And let them make me a sanctuary. Then will I dwell among them."

v. 15. This verse is a parenthesis.

v. 22. wē-nō·adtī. "Then (these things being done) will I meet thee there."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

wē-āsīθā. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperative hakrēv in v. 1. "And make thou."

v. 42. "And make."

v. 43. wē-lō yiśū āwōn wā-mēθū. "And thereby they shall not bear iniquity, and (in bearing it) die."

CHAPTER XXIX.

v. 3. This Perfect nāθattā is subjoined to the Imperative lēkaχ in v. 1.

v. 12. These words wē-eθ-kol mizbēaχ are a parenthesis; the wē being prefixed, not to the verb, but to a noun; and the original Imperfect form being resumed.

v. 14. This verse also is a parenthesis, following the same construction.

CHAPTER XXX.

v. 1. wē-āsīθā. "And thou shalt make:" thus resuming the construction which was interrupted at v. 35 of the last chapter.

v. 33. Lit. "A man who shall compound" etc., which is equivalent to "If any man shall compound" etc. So that wě-nikraθ becomes a regular statement of the result to follow on that supposition, "Then shall he be cut off."

CHAPTER XXXII.

v. 8. Lit. "They made—then they bowed down to it—then they sacrificed to it." The wa is used to mark the stages of their apostasy.

v. 23. "So they said unto me."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

vv. 7-11. From wě-hāyāh in the middle of v. 7 to the end of v. 11 we have no longer a narrative of specific facts happening at certain times, but a statement of the ordinary and customary course of things which arose as soon as Moses removed the tabernacle to a place outside of the camp. The wā and its Imperfects are dropped, and instead we find we with Perfects indicating the several stages in the new order of things. "And it became the custom—every man that seeketh the Lord, goeth out—." "Also it became the custom—when Moses goeth out, straightway rise up all the people and take their stand—and look—." "Also it became the custom, when Moses goeth into the tabernacle straightway descendeth—and standeth—and He speaketh," etc.

v. 10. wě-rāāh—wě-kām. Concurrent Perfects. "And whenever the people saw—then they rose up."

v. 11. wě-dibber. The writer repeats the closing words of v. 9, and goes on to explain the manner of the speaking there mentioned.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

v. 33. Lit. "Then Moses ceases speaking with them, then (after ceasing to speak) he puts on his face a veil."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

E. V. "Then wrought Bezaleel and Aholiab." If this had been the meaning, it must have been expressed in Hebrew by wā with the Imperfect. The form wě-hāyāh indicates a grammatical dependence of this verse on the last verse of the chapter preceding. "In order that Bezaleel and Aholiab may work (be the regular workers)." The beginning of the work is narrated in the following verses.

CHAPTER XL.

v. 29. Here the sequence is broken, in order to introduce a mention of facts which were going on concurrently with some of the facts just narrated. Whilst one set of men were, by direction of Moses, setting up the tabernacle and putting in their places the ark, the table of shew bread, and other things appertaining to the tabernacle; another set, also under his direction, were putting the brazen altar and the laver in their places outside of the tabernacle.

v. 31. "Moses and Aaron washed their hands and feet thereat," i.e. they did so regularly and habitually, as is expressly stated in the next verse. The Perfect is used to indicate the custom.

LEVITICUS—CHAPTER IV.

v. 3. wě-hakrīv. “Then shall he offer.”

vv. 11, 12. wě-hōšī. In the beginning of v. 12, continues the regular series of subjoined Perfects. But v. 11 disturbs the construction. It is, however, an irregularity which does not affect the questions with which alone we are here concerned, viz. the use and meaning of the Forms called Perfect and Imperfect. The same irregularity appears in the LXX.

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 48. wě-im bō yāvō—wě-tihar. “If the priest shall, by actual entrance into the house and by personal inspection, have satisfied himself that the plague hath not spread in the house, then he shall pronounce it clean.”

CHAPTER XVII.

v. 10. Whatsoever man, etc. i.e. “If any man shall eat, then (whensoever he shall eat) will I set my face against him.” A similar construction occurs below in v. 13 and again in xxiv. 15.

CHAPTER XIX.

v. 12. lō-θissāvē-ū — we-χillalta. “Ye shall not swear by my name falsely, and thereby profane the name of thy God.”

v. 29. “Lest the land fall to whoredom and the land be full of wickedness.” The subjoined Perfect marks a later stage in the course of evil; namely, the general demoralization of which a prevalence of unchastity would be the beginning.

CHAPTER XXV.

v. 36. al-tikkax—wě-yārēṭā—wě-ḫāi. “Take not usury of him, but fear thy God, and let thy brother live.”

CHAPTER XXVI.

vv. 40-42. wě-hiṭwaddū—wě-zākartī. Concurrent Perfects. “Whensoever they confess their iniquity, then will I remember my covenant.”

NUMBERS—CHAPTER I.

v. 48. “Then spake the Lord.”

v. 50. we-attah haḥkēd. “But do thou appoint.”

CHAPTER III.

v. 4. ū-vānīm lō-hāyū lā-hem. “And they had no children.” The Perfect is here used to state circumstances existing at the time of the fact last mentioned, and accompanying that fact. It is equivalent to saying “and they died without issue.”

v. 44. wě-hāyū. “And let them be mine.” This Perfect is subjoined to kaḫ in the beginning of the verse.

CHAPTER IV.

v. 15. lā-yiggēū—wā-mēṭū. One transaction, “They shall not touch—and in touching die.”

CHAPTER V.

v. 22. ū-vāū. These words continue the imprecation, “And may this water go.”

CHAPTER VIII.

v. 18. wā-ekkaḫ. “So I took the Levites instead of all the first-born—then I gave the Levites to Aaron.”

v. 22. bāū. “And after that went the Levites (regularly and habitually) in, to do their service in the tabernacle.”

CHAPTER IX.

v. 21. wě-naḏālāh — wě-nāsā.ū. “Whenever (the cloud) was taken up, then they journeyed.” A like construction recurs in x. 17.

CHAPTER X.

v. 14. From this verse forward up to v. 27, the Imperfect with wa is not used. The statement comprised in these verses relates, not to any specific facts, but to the custom and fixed order according to which the march of the tribes was conducted, so as to maintain unaltered the relative positions of the several portions of the host. The Perfect therefore is employed throughout. At the close of v. 28 the writer resumes his narrative of the facts of the journey. “So they set forward. Then said Moses to Hobad.”

CHAPTER XI.

v. 25. wa-yiṯnabbēū — wě-lō yāsāfū. “Then they acted as prophets, and did not add,” i.e. they did not act as prophets after that time. So that this Perfect does not indicate a new fact or event in the narrative, but merely the nature of the fact last mentioned, viz. that the gift was temporary.

v. 31. āmērū. Whilst Caleb was encouraging the people to go up, his companions were advising them to the contrary. The Perfect refers to the time given in the verse preceding.

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 15. wě-hēmattā—wě-āmērū. "When Thou killest (as Thou threatenest to do) all this people, then will the nations speak."

CHAPTER XIX.

v. 3. ū-něθattem. "Then (that being done) shall ye give."

vv. 11-16. These verses, which state the circumstances under which a person will become unclean, are introduced by way of parenthesis in the midst of the directions given for the removal of uncleanness. The regular construction is resumed, and the directions are completed, in vv. 17-19.

CHAPTER XX.

vv. 14, 15. hat-tělāāh—wai-yērēdū. "The trouble that befell us. Then (after that) our fathers went down to Egypt." The trouble then was the famine.

v. 24. yēāsēf Ahārōn. "Let Aaron be gathered to his people."

CHAPTER XXI.

v. 34. al-tirā—we-āsīθā. "Fear not, but do." The intervening words being a parenthesis.

CHAPTER XXII.

v. 41. wai-yar—mis-som. "And shewed to him from thence."

CHAPTER XXXI.

v. 8. wě-eθ-malkē Midyān hārēgū. "And even the kings they slew." The Perfect here states no new fact, but serves to make more clear and decided the general statement preceding, namely, that all the males were slain.

v. 50. wan-nakrēv. "And so we bring," i.e. having counted the men of war under our command and found not one missing, we in consequence thereof bring an offering.

CHAPTER XXXII.

v. 15. kī yesūvun — wē-yāsaf — wē-siḡattem. Lit. "In case ye turn back, then He will yet again leave them. Then, if He so leave them, ye will be the destroyers of this people."

vv. 34-37. wai-yivnū—ū-vēnē R. bānū. "Then (after Moses had assigned the land) the children of Gad built the places named in vv. 34-36: and, during the same time, the children of Reuben built the places named in vv. 37-8."

DEUTERONOMY—CHAPTER II.

v. 12. "Also in Seir dwelt the Horim beforetime; but the children of Esau dispossessed them, and after a time destroyed them. So they dwell there in their stead."

CHAPTER III.

v. 2. See note on Numbers xxi. 34.

CHAPTER IV.

v. 6. ū-sēmartem. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperative rēēh in v. 5.

v. 15. we-nismartem. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperative hissāmer in v. 9.

v. 29. ū-vikkastem—ū-māṣāḡā. "When ye seek, then shalt thou find."

v. 33. wai-yēḡī. "And after that continue to live."

v. 39. wē-yādaṡā. "Know therefore." This Perfect is subjoined to hissāmērū in v. 23; all the verses from 25 to 38 inclusive being a parenthesis.

v. 42. wě-nās — wā-χāi. "When he fleeth unto one of these cities, then he liveth."

CHAPTER V.

v. 29 (E. V. 32). ū-sēmartem la-āsōθ. "Observe therefore to do.". At this point the construction which was interrupted at v. 41 of chap. iv. is resumed; two long parentheses filling up the interval, viz. chap. iv. 41-49, and chap. v. 1-28 (E. V. 1—31).

CHAPTER VI.

v. 3. wě-sāma.tā — wě-samartā — la-āsōθ. "When thou hearest, then shalt thou observe to do it."

v. 5. wě-āhavlā. "And love thou." This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperative sēma in v. 4.

v. 6. wě-hāyū. "And let these words be;" thus continuing the construction of the preceding verse. So likewise in vv. 7-10. "And teach thou—and talk—and bind—and let them be—and write—and let it be."

CHAPTER VII.

v. 1. wě-nāsal. "And cast out." This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect yěvīā-kā.

v. 9. wě-yāda.tā. "And thou shalt know." This verse continues the construction of vv. 1-5, the vv. 6-8 being a parenthesis.

CHAPTER VIII.

v. 18. wě-zākartā. "But remember." This Perfect is subjoined to hisamer in v. 11, the vv. 12-17 being a parenthesis.

CHAPTER X.

v. 16. ū-maltem. "Circumcise therefore." In the foregoing verses nothing appears to account for the use of this form, unless it be allowable to treat the whole passage from chap. ix. 8 to chap. x. 15 as a long parenthesis; or rather, as two parentheses, of which the second begins at chap. x. 12. This inference, grounded on grammatical considerations only, is strengthened by the connexion of thought between chap. ix. v. 7, and this verse.

CHAPTER XI.

v. 1. wě-āhavtā. "Therefore thou shalt love." This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfects in v. 20 of the last chapter.

v. 2. w-īda.tem. "And ye shall know (for I speak not with your children, which have not known, and have not seen) the chastisement."

v. 14. wě-nāθattī—wě-āsaftā. "Then will I give—and thou shalt gather in."

CHAPTER XII.

v. 30. ēkāh ya.aydū. "How did these nations serve their gods?" The Imperfect is used to express an act repeated from time to time. What forms of sacrifice and prayer did these nations use at their regular times of worship?

v. 31. āšū. "They do habitually." yisrēfū. "They burn from time to time."

CHAPTER XIII.

v. 5 (E. V. v. 6). ū-viartā. This Perfect is subjoined to yūmāθ in the earlier part of the verse. "By the death of the false prophet shall the evil be put away."

CHAPTER XV.

v. 6. kī-Y. bērak-ka—wě-haāvattā. "In case the Lord shall have blessed thee—then shalt thou lend." The whole context, from chap. xii. 1 downward, shows that a future time is here contemplated.

CHAPTER XVII.

vv. 2-3. āser ya.āseh—wai-yēlek wai-yaāvöd—wai-yistaχū. Here the grammatical form, ordinarily used for the purpose of narrating facts actually past, is employed for the purpose of stating a case supposed to have happened, and to have been ascertained to be matter of fact, before the time at which the command now given is to take effect.

v. 12. wě-hā-is āser ya.āseh—wa-mēθ ū-viartā. "And the man (i.e. if any man) shall do—then shall he die, and thereby shalt thou put away the evil."

CHAPTER XX.

v. 18. yēlammēdū—wa-χātāθem. "To the end that they may not teach you and you (being so taught) sin." These words express one operation, the cause and its effects.

CHAPTER XXVI.

v. 16. wě-sāmartā wě-āsīθā. "Thou shalt therefore keep and do them," etc. The relation between the people of Israel and their God carries with it an obligation on their part to render immediate obedience to every command which proceeds from Him.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The blessings in vv. 3-6 of this chapter and the curses in vv. 16-19 are in the E. V. rendered as promises of good and as threats of evil. Yet they are expressed in words which, in form and position, closely resemble those which are used in chap. xxvii. vv. 15-26, and should therefore be rendered in the same manner. In accordance with this view, the verses immediately following in each case are in the precative or imprecative form. Thus vv. 7, 8, 9, "May the Lord cause" etc. May the Lord command etc. May the Lord establish etc.

v. 12. yiftaḥ Y. "May the Lord open" etc. wē-hilwīṭā. "Then (if he so open, etc.) shalt thou lend."

v. 14. "And if thou go not aside."

v. 20. yesallaḥ Y. bē-kā. "The Lord send upon thee."
A like form recurs in vv. 21, 22, 24, 25, 27, 28.

v. 35. yakkē-kāh. "The Lord smite thee."

v. 36. yōlēk. "The Lord bring thee, etc.—then (when thou art brought thither) shalt thou serve."

v. 49. yiśśā Y. "The Lord bring."

CHAPTER XXIX.

v. 8 (E. V. v. 9). ū-sēmartem. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect ṭēdē-ū in v. 5. The intervening vv. 6-7 being a parenthesis. "To the end that ye may know that I am the Lord—and that ye may keep the words of this covenant."

CHAPTER XXXIII.

vv. 27-8. wa-igāres—wai-yōmer—wai-yiskōn. "Therefore he thrust out the enemy—and said, Destroy them. So Israel dwelt in safety alone."

JOSHUA—CHAPTER II.

v. 6. wě-hī he.ēlāθ-ām. A breach of sequence: the act of hiding having preceded the act of answering the king.

v. 22. wa-ivaksū. "Then they search." This does not mean that the pursuers start afresh on their pursuit after the last fact mentioned; but that the pursuers continue their search after the last fact introduced by a wa, viz. the fact of the spies taking up their abode in the mountain.

CHAPTER IV.

v. 16. "Command the priests—that they come up out of Jordan" (wě-ya.ālū). Here the dependent Imperfect expresses the purport of the command.

CHAPTER VI.

vv. 5-6. kī-yēšēū — wě-nasnū — wě-yāšēū. "In case they come out against us—then we will flee before them and they will come out after us, even until we have drawn them away from the city." The Perfect yāšēū is contemporaneous with the Perfect nasnū.

The concluding words of v. 6, which disturb the construction, are not found in the LXX. It is apparently an error of transcription, a repetition of the last words of v. 5, owing to the recurrence of the words bā-risōnāh.

CHAPTER VIII.

vv. 18-19. The men in ambush had arisen and were already standing up—and, when Joshua stretched out his hands, then they began to run towards the city. This is shown by the breach of sequence at the commencement of v. 19. wě-hā-ōrēv kām.

CHAPTER IX.

v. 21. wai-yōmērū. Lit. "Then say the princes—Let them live. So they become hewers of wood" (wai-yihyū).

CHAPTER X.

v. 1. Here in an indirect narrative we find wa with the Imperfect used in exactly the same way as in a direct narrative: wai-yaḥarimāh, i.e. "Not only taken Ai, but gone further and utterly destroyed it."

CHAPTER XIX.

vv. 49-50. waī-yittēnū—nāṭēnū. "Then the children of Israel gave an inheritance to Joshua—they gave him the city which he asked." The Perfect is here used in the latter clause, because it does not carry the narrative forward, but only explains a transaction formerly mentioned, and refers to the time of that transaction.

CHAPTER XX.

vv. 2-3. "Appoint—that they may be."

v. 4. wē-nās—wē-āmad—wē-dibbēr—wē-āsēfū. "When one hath fled—and hath stood—and declared, then shall they take him in."

CHAPTER XXII.

v. 1. sēmartem — wat-tismě.ū. "Ye kept all that Moses commanded you. And, since that time, ye obey my voice."

v. 17. wa-ihī han-negef. "A grievous iniquity, the consequence whereof was the plague."

v. 18. wě-attem. "And, notwithstanding that, ye are turning away this day from following the Lord; and this is the state of things—ye are rebelling this day against the Lord, and to-morrow with the whole congregation will He be wroth" (wě-hāyāh).

v. 25. wě-hisbiθū. This Perfect is subjoined to yōmērū in v. 24.

v. 28. wě-hāyāh kī-yōmērū—wě-āmarnū. Concurrent Perfects. "When it cometh to pass (becometh the state of things) that they say—then say we."

CHAPTER XXIII.

vv. 4-8. These verses are to be regarded as a parenthesis. In this parenthesis the Perfect χāzaktem is subjoined to the Imperative rěū in v. 4.

CHAPTER XXIV.

v. 7. wat-tirenāh. "Then your eyes saw."

JUDGES—CHAPTER I.

v. 8. "Then the children of Judah fought against Jerusalem, and they took it—and they smote it (i.e. the people), and the city they set on fire" (sillēxū bā-ēs). The Perfect is here used to express an event contemporaneous with the event last mentioned; the city being set on fire, whilst the slaughter was going on.

CHAPTER II.

v. 1. aāleh. Here the narrative commences without any Preface or introductory clause. Therefore the Imperfect alone is employed without the wa: there being nothing for the wa to refer back to. The past time is clearly indicated by the reference to Egypt.

v. 3. wě-gam-āmartī. "Wherefore also I say, I will not." The Preterite here indicates a word (or purpose) belonging to the present time, no other time being indicated.

CHAPTER III.

v. 23. wai-yisgōr—wě-nā·āl. The Perfect nā·āl is subjoined to the Imperfect yisgōr, because the acts indicated by the two verbs are parts of one transaction.

v. 24. wě-hū yāšā—wě-ā·vādā-w bāū. Concurrent Perfects. "So soon as he (Ehud) went forth, his (Eglon's) servants came."

CHAPTER IV.

v. 1. wě Ehūd mēθ. Lit. "And Ehud was dead," i.e. was dead at the time when the people again did evil.

v. 21. "She smote—and she fastened it into the ground, for he was fast asleep. So he—and then he died." The LXX. render yā·af by ἐσκοτώθη.

CHAPTER XI.

v. 8. lākēn — savnū — wě-hālakṭā. “For that very reason (namely, our distress) have we come back to thee; and, for that reason, wilt thou go with us and fight.” The condition of the people of Gilead imposes a duty on Jephthah.

CHAPTER XII.

vv. 10-15. “Then died Ibzān—and after him Elon began to judge Israel, and he continued to judge Israel ten years: then Elon died. Then after him Abdon began to judge Israel; and he continued to judge Israel eight years. Then Abdon died.” Here yispōt is used throughout both for beginning, and for continuing, to act as judge. The context in every case shows in which of the senses the words are to be taken. Contrast this with Judges xvi. 31, where the narrator, looking back upon the whole judgeship of Samson as one fact complete and ended, uses the Perfect sāfat.

CHAPTER XIII.

vv. 2-3. Lit. “There was a certain man—whose name was Manoah, and his wife was barren and bare not. Then appeared an angel of the Lord unto the woman and said, Behold now thou wast barren and barest not, and thou dost conceive and bear a son.”

These forms hinnēh-nā in v. 3, and again hinnāk in v. 5, suggest a present time. The LXX. render χάρᾱ in v. 5 by εν γαστρι ἔχεις.

CHAPTER XVI.

v. 18. wě-ālū — wai-yaālū. “And when they went up, then they brought." The construction of this short Preface is similar to that of I. Sam. vi. 16, "And when the five Lords of the Philistines saw it, then they returned."

CHAPTER XVIII.

v. 17. bāū—lākēxū. "As soon as they came, they took."

CHAPTER XIX.

v. 4. "Then his father-in-law detaineth him. So he abides with him three days. Then they eat and drink" (wai-yōkēlū). The act expressed by yōkēlū follows in order of time on the act expressed by the last Imperfect with wa, namely, the word yesev (he abides), not on the end of the time during which the former act lasted.

CHAPTER XX.

v. 13. wě-lō avū. The Perfect here expresses the state of mind of the men of Benjamin at the time when the message just mentioned was delivered to them.

I. SAMUEL—CHAPTER I.

v. 3. wě-ālāh. This Perfect expresses a custom. "And this man went up regularly—he was one who habitually attended the festivals."

v. 3. wai-yizbaḡ E. wě-nāṭan. "He offers, and out of that offering gives." The Imperfect and the Perfect indicate two stages of one transaction.

v. 15. The clause wě-yayin — lō-sāṭiṭi is a parenthesis. "I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit—sorrow, not wine, being the cause of what you see—and so, being sorrowful, I pour out my soul in prayer" (wā-espōk).

CHAPTER II.

v. 28. wā-ettēnāh. “And after that went on to give.”

CHAPTER IV.

v. 11. wa-ārōn E. nilkāχ. A broken sequence. “And in the course of the battle (mentioned in v. 10) the ark was taken, and the two sons of Eli were slain.”

v. 14. wě-hā-is mihar wai-yāvō. “Whilst the cry of the men of the city was ringing in Eli’s ears, and he was greatly alarmed thereby, the man sped on through the town, and so reached Eli and told him.”

CHAPTER V.

vv. 6-7. wai-yirū — wě-āmērū. Literally, “Then the men of Ashdod see that it is so, and then and there they resolve, The ark shall not abide with us.”

CHAPTER VI.

v. 8. wě-ēθ kelēi—tāsīmū. This is a parenthesis, interrupting the enumeration of the acts to be done. The parenthesis ends with the words miš-šidd-ō.

v. 15. wě-ha Lewīyim hōrīdū. “Now the Levites had taken down the ark and put it on the stone.”

CHAPTER VII.

vv. 15-16. wai-yispōt S.—wě-hālak—wě-sāvav—wě-sāfat. Here the continued action of Samuel as judge during a specified time is expressed by an Imperfect. Then follow Perfects, each having wě prefixed. These indicate no new fact or time, but only the manner in which the office was habitually discharged. Lit. “After that time Samuel continued to act as judge all the days of his life. And it was his custom to travel from year to year, and visit on his circuit Bethel, etc., and to act as judge at all those places."

CHAPTER VIII.

v. 14. "And he will take your fields—and give them to his servants." Two stages of one transaction (yikkax wē-nāṭan).

CHAPTER IX.

v. 5. hēm māh bāu—we S. āmar. "As soon as they were come—Saul said."

v. 6. yaggīd—āser halaknū. "Will tell us of our way which we have taken and are now travelling upon, whether it be the right or the wrong way."

v. 8. wē-nāṭatti—wē-higgīd. Lit. "When I give—then he tells."

CHAPTER X.

v. 2. ū-māṣāṭā. "Then thou shalt find." The time of the finding is shown to be future by the words "When thou art gone from me to-day."

v. 5. wē-hēm māh miṭnabbēim. "And they shall be prophesying," i.e. at the time when thou meetest them.

CHAPTER XII.

v. 17. Lit. "So know ye and see."

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 24. wai-yōel. "Then Samuel adjured the people."

v. 52. wē-rāah—wai-yaasfēhū. "And during the time just mentioned—i.e. the continuance of the war—when Saul saw any strong man, he thereupon took him.”

CHAPTER XV.

v. 30. “And return with me. If thou do so, then shall I worship the Lord thy God.”

v. 34. wai-yēlek Se. — we Sāul ālāh. Here the Perfect is used in the latter clause, because the journey therein mentioned was contemporaneous with the journey mentioned in the former clause.

CHAPTER XVII.

v. 2. neesfū. “Were gathered together,” i.e. during the same time, in which the Philistines were gathering their hosts together.

v. 10. wē-nillāxāmāh. “And let us fight.”

v. 35. wē-yāšāfi. Here the wē expresses a close and immediate connexion—“When the lion came and took a lamb, immediately I went out after him.”

CHAPTER XX.

vv. 5-6. The fifth verse is a proposal or suggestion of a course to be taken on the morrow. “Behold to-morrow is the new moon, and I shall, etc. Then thou shalt send me away—And if thy father miss me, then shalt thou say,” etc.

CHAPTER XXII.

v. 14. The so-called participle sār, in v. 14, means one that goeth habitually at any time at thy bidding.

CHAPTER XXV.

v. 31. wē-hētiv Y.—wē-zākartā. “And when the Lord dealeth well with thee—then thou shalt remember me.”

CHAPTER XXXI.

v. 10. "And they fastened his body to the wall of Beth-shan" (wě—tākeū), i.e. during the time in which some were putting his armour in the house of Ashtaroth, others fastened his body to the wall.

II. SAMUEL—CHAPTER I.

v. 1. wai-yēsev. "Then David abode."

CHAPTER III.

v. 21. ākūmah wě-ēlēkāh. "Let me arise and go and let me gather together."

v. 24. wai-yēlek halok. i.e. "And is actually continuing his journey," whereas he should have been seized and slain.

v. 39. yesallēm Y. "May the Lord reward."

CHAPTER VII.

v. 6. wā-ehyeh miṭhallēk bē-ōhel. "So that I continue in the state of one who travelleth in a tent."

v. 10. wě-śamtī. "And I appointed a place for my children Israel, and planted them." These clauses are parts of an enumeration of facts which begins with akriṭāh in v. 9, and is carried forward by means of subjoined Perfects into this verse, ending with sākan.

CHAPTER IX.

vv. 9-10. "All that belonged to Saul I give to thy master's son, and thou art tiller of the land for him, and bringest in the fruits," i.e. "And, it being so given, it is thy duty to till the land."

CHAPTER X.

v. 18. wě-ēθ S.—hikkāh. i.e. "He smote Shorak, while the general slaughter was still going on." To show this, the sequence is broken.

CHAPTER XI.

v. 15. "Set ye Uriah in the forefront, and retire ye from him. If ye do so, he will be smitten and die." The words wě-nikkāh depending on an implied or tacit supposition.

CHAPTER XII.

The preface of Nathan's parable ends with kănāh. The narrative then commences and runs on thus, literally, "So he nourisheth it, and it groweth up—of his own food it eateth, of his own cup it drinketh, in his bosom it lieth, and it becometh to him as a daughter."

CHAPTER XIII.'

v. 34. Here, and in v. 37, the English Version uses the same words. In the Hebrew the form varies. In v. 34 the fact of Absalom's flight being there narrated in its proper place, the Imperfect form with wa (wai-yivraχ) is used. In v. 37, and again in v. 38, where the writer looks back to this fact from a later point of the story, the form appropriated for marking a breach of sequence is employed, viz. we-A. bāraχ.

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 7. wě-nasmidāh. Lit. "And let us destroy the heir also: which if they do, then will they quench my coal which is left."

v. 26. kī kāvēd—wě-gilliḫ-ō. “When (in case) it was heavy on him, then he polled it.”

v. 28. “So Absalom dwelt two years in Jerusalem, and saw not the King’s face,” i.e. without seeing the King’s face during that time. The Perfect rāāh being used, not to indicate a new fact, but to explain the circumstances of the fact just mentioned.

CHAPTER XVI.

v. 15. wě-A. bāū. i.e. They had come to Jerusalem whilst the events just narrated were going on.

CHAPTER XVII.

vv. 1-3. wě-ākumāh wě-erdēfāh—wě-āvō—wě-haḫāradti—wě-nās—wē-hikkēōī—wě-asīvāh. “And let me arise and pursue—that I may come upon him while he is weary: if that be done, then shall I make him afraid, and all the people shall flee, and I shall smite the King only. So let me bring back all the people unto thee.”

v. 17. wě-hālēkāh. This verse states the customary mode of communication. “The girl used to go and tell them: and they, on receiving any message, immediately started and told the King.”

v. 18. wai-yar. “Then, on the occasion of Hushai’s message being forwarded, a lad saw them.”

v. 24. “At the time when David was come to M., Absalom passed over Jordan.”

v. 25. This verse is a parenthesis. “Now Absalom had made Amasa captain of the host.”

CHAPTER XX.

v. 10. wě-Yōāb. In this latter part of v. 10 there occurs a breach of sequence. The narrator pauses, to tell what happened between the inflicting of the mortal stroke and the death of Amasa.

CHAPTER XXI.

v. 3. ū-vārākū. Lit. "Then bless ye the Lord."

I. KINGS—CHAPTER II.

v. 2. ānōkī hōlēk—wě-χāzaktā. The death of David will create an immediate necessity for vigorous and decisive action on the part of Solomon.

CHAPTER III.

vv. 7-9. The latter part of v. 7 and the whole of v. 8 are a parenthesis. The direct structure is resumed in v. 9. "Thou hast made Thy servant king over Thy people—give therefore unto Thy servant an understanding heart to judge Thy people," i.e. "Thou didst call him to the office of king and judge; give him therefore the gifts needed for discharging the duties of that office." These two things, the power and the wisdom to use that power aright, should concur. Therefore the structure appropriate to concurrent acts is resorted to (hīmlaktā—wě-nāθattā).

CHAPTER VIII.

v. 16. wā-evχαr. "Then, at the end of that time, during which there had been no place fixed on for a house, I chose David."

v. 27 is a parenthesis. fānīθā, in the beginning of

v. 28, is a Perfect subjoined to the Precative form yēamēnnā in v. 26. "Let Thy word be verified—and have Thou respect unto the prayer of Thy servant." Again at the beginning of v. 30 is a further subjoined Perfect sāma.tā.

v. 32. wě-attah tisma. "Then hear Thou." The same precative form recurs in vv. 34, 36, 39, and 43. In this verse, and again in v. 49, we have a different construction, viz. two Perfects used to indicate concurrence or close connexion: wě-sāma.tā—wě-āsīṭā. Lit. "Thou (who art a God that keepeth covenant and mercy, v. 23) so soon as Thou hearest the prayer of Thy people, Thou wilt maintain their cause." The mercifulness of God is viewed as necessarily binding together the prayer of the people and the succour from their God.

CHAPTER IX.

v. 25. we-he.ēleh. The Perfect is here used to express, not a fact occurring at a certain point of time, but a custom or fixed practice.

CHAPTER XIII.

vv. 1-3. "And behold, whilst Jeroboam was doing the thing just narrated, a man of God was come from Judah—and Jeroboam was standing by the altar. Then cried he against the altar, and said—And he gave a sign" (wai-yomer—wē-nāṭan). The man was engaged in a transaction, which consisted of two parts: first he announced the woe to come; and then he gave a sign to show that, what he announced, would certainly come to pass. The Imperfect with wa indicates the former part; the latter part is indicated by a subjoined Perfect.

CHAPTER XVI.

v. 21. "Then were the people divided into two parts: half followed—and half followed." In the former clause, which states a new fact, the Imperfect is used: in the latter clause, which explains the former, the Perfect is used (yēḫālēk—hāyāh aḫārē). Compare xviii. 6.

CHAPTER XX.

v. 33. wē-ha-ānāsīm. "Now the men, while the king was speaking, were diligently observing whether anything would come from him. Then, when he had spoken, they did hastily catch it."

CHAPTER XXI.

vv. 23-24. In these two verses the words of the E. V., "The dogs shall eat," occur twice. In the former they correspond to the Hebrew words hak-kēlāvīm yōkēlū, which are placed in the order usual in such cases. In the latter the sentence being inverted (i.e. the object of the verb being put before the verb), these words also are inverted, thus yōkēlū hak-kelāvīm.

CHAPTER XXII.

v. 43. "And he walked in all the way of Asa his father, he turned not aside—from it" (wai-yēlek—lō sār). The Perfect being used to explain the former verb, much as we might use an adverb or adverbial clause, e.g. unintentionally, without swerving.

II. KINGS—CHAPTER II.

v. 25. "And he (Elisha) went from thence to Mount Carmel. And from thence he returned to Samaria" (wai-yēlek—ū-missām sāv). If the journey from Bethel to Carmel had been viewed as distinct from the journey from Carmel to Samaria, we should have had in the latter clause wai-yāsov. But the whole is regarded as one journey. It is therefore to be understood that the prophet's home at that time (or at least the end of his journey) was in Samaria. There is something unusual here in the insertion of two words between the Particle and the Perfect: the insertion however in this case does not express anything more than would have been understood without it.

CHAPTER IV.

v. 22. "And let me run" (wě-ārūsāh).

CHAPTER V.

vv. 24-25. wai-yēlēkū—wě-hū vā. i.e. While the men were on their way back to their master, Gehazi went in and then stood before his master.

CHAPTER IX.

vv. 6-7. Lit. "I (the Lord) anoint thee king—and thou smitest" (mesaxtī—wě-hikkiā). The two facts being treated as concurrent or immediately connected: the duty of the new king to fulfil the purpose of Him, who gave him the kingship, being apparent.

CHAPTER X.

vv. 2-3. "Now, seeing your master's sons are with you—look out the best—and fight for your master's house." In these verses we find the principle, though not the usual form, of the construction used for marking the concurrence of facts. There is not as usual a Perfect form in both clauses ; but v. 2 sets forth certain facts, out of which the fitness of the conduct suggested in the next verse becomes apparent.

CHAPTER XII.

v. 10. wě-nāḇēnū. i.e. The custom was, that the priests put therein all the money that was brought into the house.

CHAPTER XIV.

v. 22. hū bānāh, i.e. It was he who built. So likewise the hū is emphatic in v. 25 ; and again in xv. 35.

CHAPTER XV.

v. 20. "So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there" (lō-āmad). The Perfect being used to indicate, not a new fact, but a circumstance connected with the fact last mentioned.

CHAPTER XIX.

v. 24. i.e. "Whenever I besiege any place, I dry up the rivers thereof" (wě-ayḥāriv).

CHAPTER XXV.

v. 14. āser yēsārēṭū b-ām, i.e. "Wherewith from time to time they ministered."

THE PSALMS.

These Notes refer throughout to the Bible version. The numbers of the verses follow those of the Hebrew text. It will be understood that the renderings, which are occasionally given in these Grammatical Notes of portions of the Hebrew, are not offered as exact and close translations, but rather as paraphrases intended to convey the full meaning of the original.

PSALM I.

v. 3. wě-hāyāh. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect in the preceding verse. The result or effect of the meditation is to produce fruit.

PSALM II.

vv. 1-2. The following paraphrase may serve to explain the variations in the forms of the verbs used in these verses:—

“Why are the nations in a state of rage and uproar (rāgēsū) and the people meditating a vain design (yehgū)? Why are the kings setting themselves at their posts for battle (yiṭyaṣṣēvū), and why are the rulers leagued together against the Lord and against his anointed?”

v. 4. “Laugheth—hath them in derision, even whilst they are defying Him.”

v. 5. “Then speaketh He—and vexeth.” The Prophet sees all pass before him in vision.

v. 6. wa-ānī. Before Alef wa is used for we. The pronoun ānī is expressed for the purpose of emphasis. “Yet I—it is I that have anointed.”

PSALM III.

v. 8. hikkīṭā. “For Thou smitest—Thou art the smiter of mine enemies—Thou breakest.”

PSALM V.

v. 12. wě-ṭāsēk. “And defend Thou them.” The 2nd person Imperfect is here shown to be Precative, by being placed in close connexion with Precatives, before and after.

v. 13. "For Thou dost bless—dost compass," i.e. dost shield the righteous man from harm, when (if at any time) it comes nigh him. This sense is suggested by the Imperfect.

PSALM VI.

v. 10. yikkāḥ. "He receiveth, is even now receiving, my prayer."

PSALM VII.

v. 5. wā-axallesāh. wā for wa, because of the Alef following. "If I rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me—which I did not—nay, rather, I went further, and I delivered—let go free—him that without cause was mine enemy."

v. 16. Lit. "He made a pit and then he digged it deep—and after that he fell."

v. 17. yāsūv. "Let his mischief return upon his own head."

PSALM VIII.

v. 6. wat-təḥassērēhū. "Not only art Thou mindful of him and visitest him, but then Thy goodness passeth beyond this, Thou makest him little lower than the angels: Thou makest him to have dominion," etc.

PSALM IX.

v. 4. āsīṭā—yāsavtā. The Perfects are here used to assert that which is true, not at one time only, but at all times. "Thou maintainest—Thou sittest."

v. 15. āgilāh. "Let me rejoice."

v. 20. "Let the nations know."

PSALM X.

v. 3. hillēl. The Perfect is used to express a settled habit or character. "He is a boaster."

v. 17. sāmātā. "Thou ever hearest."

PSALM XI.

v. 2. kōnēnū. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect yidrēkūn. The two clauses indicate two stages in the preparation to shoot. In prose wē would be prefixed to the Perfect.

PSALM XIII.

vv. 5-6. bātaytī. "I trust habitually in thy mercy. Let my heart rejoice. Let me sing unto the Lord, (i.e. find a subject for song) in that He hath dealt bountifully with me."

PSALM XIV.

v. 1. The Perfect āmar expresses the habitual thought or sentiment of the fool, i.e. of the ungodly man.

v. 5. pāḫādū. "All the while they—the ungodly—are in a state of great fear, for God, who gives peace and confidence, is not with them."

PSALM XV.

vv. 2-3. The positive characteristics of the man (who shall dwell on the holy hill) are expressed by the so-called participle or nomen agentis: the negative, by lō with a Perfect as in Ps. i. v. 1. In both cases alike, permanent characteristics or habits are intended.

v. 4. yēkabbēd. "He honoureth such persons, whenever he meets with them." This sense is suggested by the Imperfect.

PSALM XVI.

v. 4. "Many be their sorrows."

v. 7. āvārek. "I bless—I am now blessing." This Psalm is the utterance of the blessing.

v. 10. lō-θaāzōv. "Thou wilt not leave." The reference to Šēōl implies a future time.

PSALM XVII.

v. 6. ānī-kērāθī-kā—kī θaānēnī. "I am a caller—I call habitually—upon Thee, because, whenever I call, Thou hearest me."

v. 9. yakkifū. "Are compassing me about."

v. 11. "They are setting."

v. 14. wē-hinnīxū. "And leave." This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect yisbe.ū. "These wealthy men have many children, and leave to them the rest of their substance."

v. 15. ešbe.āh. "Let me be filled."

PSALM XVIII.

v. 2. erxom-kā. "I love Thee." This Psalm is the expression of my love.

erxeh. "In whom I take refuge in time of danger."

v. 4. ekrā—ū-ivvāsēva. "When I call, I am delivered. So soon as I call, the deliverance comes."

vv. 5-6. These verses set forth the state of danger and terror out of which the Psalmist has been delivered.

"Sorrows are coiled round him like cords, floods of ungodly men are making him afraid, etc. He is crying to God. Then comes the deliverance."

vv. 8-20. In these verses the several stages of this deliverance are narrated. "Then quaketh the earth and trembleth—then boweth He the heavens," etc.

v. 21. "The Lord is rewarding me according to my righteousness, according to, etc., doth He recompense me."

vv. 26-7. "Thou shewest Thyself merciful," etc.; and so throughout.

vv. 28-9. "For Thou savest—bringest down—lightest—The Lord enlighteneth," etc.

v. 29. "I run—I leap."

v. 36. "So Thou givest me the shield of Thy salvation, and Thy right hand is holding me up, and Thy gentleness is making me great."

v. 37. "Thou enlargest—and my feet slip not."

v. 38. "When I pursue—I overtake."

In all these verses 37-46 the Imperfect is to be rendered as a Present. The Psalmist throughout these verses is thankfully acknowledging the deliverances which God works for him from day to day.

v. 49. "Thou deliverest me."

PSALM XIX.

v. 2. Lit. "The heavens are tellers (mēsapperim) of the glory of God, and the firmament is a shewer-forth of His handywork." It is the office or function of the heavens to testify to the greatness of the Creator. This is expressed by the so-called Participle.

v. 3. The transmission of this knowledge, by each day and each night in its turn, is properly expressed by the Imperfect.

PSALM XXI.

v. 1. "O Lord, in Thy strength doth the King rejoice." The position of 'yismaḥ' before 'melek' is owing to the inversion of the sentence.

v. 6. tšavveh. "Art Thou laying."

v. 7. "For Thou makest him—art now making him."

v. 9. "May thy hand find out all thine enemies," i.e. May the King, who hath just conquered one enemy, in like manner conquer all. From another part of the quire comes the latter clause of the verse, "Thy right hand shall find."

PSALM XXII.

v. 16. tispeṭēnī. "Thou art bringing me."

v. 27. yōkēlū ʾānāwīm. "Let the meek eat—let them praise—may your heart live."

v. 28. "May all—remember and turn—and may all worship before Thee."

v. 30. This verse seems to be a response from another part of the quire to the invitation in v. 27. "They ate, and then they worshipped, even all that be fat in the land. Before his face are bowing all that be gone down to the dust." The latter clause is inverted, and therefore the verb comes before its noun or subject.

PSALM XXIII.

v. 1. "I lack not anything."

v. 4. The first clause of this verse imparts a future time to the whole. "I will fear no evil, for Thou wilt be with me—they shall comfort me."

PSALM XXIV.

v. 2. yēkōñene-hā. "He is still sustaining it, or keeping it firm."

PSALM XXV.

3. "None that wait on Thee shall be ashamed." vv. 5-10 are a sort of parenthesis, proceeding from another part of the quire. At v. 11 the former voices resume their chant, repeating in substance the words with which they closed it. Instead of "for Thy goodness' sake," they now say, "for Thy Name's sake." The Perfect salaxtā is subjoined to the Imperative zēkōr in v. 7.

v. 15. yōṣī. "Whenever my feet are caught in a net, He plucketh them out."

PSALM XXVI.

v. 8. āhavtī. "I love—I am a lover of."

PSALM XXVII.

v. 2. hēmmāh. The pronoun is here expressed for the purpose of emphasis. "It was they, not I, that stumbled."

v. 4. sāalti—ōṭāh avakkēs. "One thing I pray for constantly—that thing I am earnestly seeking now."

PSALM XXVIII.

v. 1. ekrā. "Do I cry." The Psalm itself is the cry.

v. 6. sāma. "He heareth at all times."

v. 7. "My heart trusteth habitually, with my song do I praise Him."

PSALM XXIX.

v. 3. hir'im. The use of the Perfect shows that the stress is on the act, not on the time. "It is the God of Glory that thundereth."

v. 8. histartī—hāyīθī. Concurrent Perfects. "So soon as Thou didst hide Thy face, I was troubled."

v. 9. "In my trouble I cried." The cry or supplication is expressed in vv. 10-11.

PSALM XXXI.

v. 7. "I hate."

v. 8. āgilāh. "Let me be glad and rejoice in Thy mercy, for that Thou considerest my trouble."

v. 12. hayīθī. "I am become a reproach, etc. They that see me, flee from me." These words do not refer to any particular act, but to the ordinary conduct, of the Psalmist's friends. Therefore the Perfect is used.

PSALM XXXII.

v. 7. "Thou preservest me. Thou compassest me."

v. 8. A voice from another part of the quire is heard saying, "I am instructing thee, etc.—I am guiding thee."

PSALM XXXIV.

vv. 5-6. dārastī—wē-ānā-nī. "Whenever—so soon as—I seek, He answers me."

A similar construction occurs in v. 6, "When they look, they are enlightened." Then comes a voice from another part of the quire, "So be it ever—May they never look in vain;" or, according to the Hebrew idiom, "May their faces never be ashamed."

v. 19. yosīa. The Imperfect is here used to state, not the existence of a specific fact, but that a certain fact always recurs under certain conditions, "If men be of a contrite spirit, He saveth them."

PSALM XXXV.

v. 11. A pause is to be made after yĕkūmūn. "They stand up as witnesses," etc.

v. 13. tāsūv. "Returneth."

v. 15. śamĕχū. "They are glad, and are gathered together—They tear (or recile) me and cease not."

vv. 20-21. wai-yarχīvū. "From secret plotting they proceed to open denunciation."

PSALM XXXVI.

v. 13. "Are not able."

PSALM XXXVII.

v. 3. śĕkōn. "Dwell (abide) in the land and feed in safety."

v. 6. The Perfect hōṣī is subjoined to ya.āseh in the preceding verse.

v. 11. hiθ.annĕgū. This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect yīrēsū.

v. 13. yīśχak. "Laugheth—is laughing, whilst the wicked man is plotting."

v. 40. wai-ya.zērēm. "Then, when trouble has befallen them, the Lord helpeth them and delivereth—delivereth them from the wicked, and saveth them."

PSALM XXXVIII.

v. 2. wat-tinχaθ. "First come Thy arrows from a dis- tance ; then Thy hand, which shot the arrows, presseth me sore."

v. 12. ōhavai. "Even my personal friends are now beginning to take the position, which my kinsfolk habitually take."

v. 13. wa-inaksū. "Others, seeing this, become actively hostile."

v. 14. wa-ēhī. "So I become as a man that heareth not."

v. 16. āmartī. "I think—this is my constant thought—Thou wilt hear me, lest," etc.

v. 19. aggīd—edag. "I declare—I am sorry." The Psalm itself being the utterance of the Psalmist's confession and sorrow.

PSALM XXXIX.

v. 2. āmartī. "I say habitually, Let me take heed—let me keep."

vv. 3-4. "I am dumb—I hold my peace—my sorrow is stirred. My heart is hot within me : While I am musing a fire is burning. I speak, am speaking, with my tongue."

This is not a narration of a sequence of facts. If so, we should have found 'wā-ādabbēr.' Rather, it is a description of an inward conflict, in the course of which the habitual purpose to keep silence is not abandoned and voluntarily followed by speech, but simply overborne (while still subsisting) by the force of strong and bitter feelings. As if the Psalmist had said, "The settled resolve of my mind is to abstain from speaking, lest I sin in speaking. My state is that of a dumb man. But, all the while, a fire is burning within me. All unawares, I find myself a speaker. I am forced to utter my distress."

PSALM XL.

In vv. 2-3 and the former clause of v. 4 the several steps of some past deliverance are recounted in the ordinary narrative form.

v. 4. yirū. "May many see it and fear and trust in the Lord."

v. 8. hinneh, vāṭī. "Lo, I am come." Compare Numb. xxii. 38, II. Sam. xix. 21.

v. 10. bišsartī follows the time of xāfaštī in v. 9. "I proclaim—I am a proclaimer." lō-eklā. "I refrain not my lips from speaking," i.e. whenever a fit time comes.

v. 12. Attāh lo ṭiklā. "Thou, Lord, wilt not refrain (withhold) Thy tender mercies—Thy loving-kindness and Thy truth will continually preserve me."

PSALM XLI.

v. 3. wē-al-tittēnēhū. "And do not Thou deliver him unto the will of his enemies." This is a cry of supplication from another part of the quire. Likewise, a direct address to God occurs in the latter clause of v. 4.

v. 5. ānī āmartī. "As for me, my constant prayer is."

v. 7. yēšē—yedabbēr. "As soon as he goeth out of the sick chamber, he begins to utter iniquity."

PSALM XLII.

v. 4. ḗlleh ezkērāh. "These things let me remember (kī e'ēvōr) how from time to time I passed on amidst the multitude of worshippers, even to (ad) the house of God."

The word ḗlleh (these) refers to the acts about to be mentioned. Compare Gen. ii. 1.

PSALM XLIII.

v. 4. wě-āvōāh. "And let me come unto the altar of God—then upon the harp will I praise Thee."

PSALM XLIV.

vv. 6-8. nenaggēāh. "Through Thee do we ~~push~~ down—do we tread them under. For I trust not in my bow, neither doth my sword save me. But Thou art our Saviour from our enemies."

v. 10. wat-taklīm-ēnū. "So Thou puttest (art putting) us to shame."

v. 19. lō here negatives the whole of the verse. "It is not the case that our heart is turned back, and so our steps declined from Thy way."

v. 20. wan-nifrōs. "If we have forgotten our own God, and so turned to the worship of false gods."

PSALM XLV.

v. 1. The words "are inditing" would require an Imperfect, in the Hebrew. The word rāyas seems to express some strong emotion or fervour.

v. 8. āhavlā—wat-tisnā. "Thou art a lover of righteousness, and so Thou hatest wickedness."

v. 9. "Kings' daughters are among thy honorable women: upon thy right hand is set the queen." The Psalmist sees before him the pomp of the royal marriage, and being so present in body or mind, proceeds to address his words to the bride in vv. 11-12. Then vv. 13-16 set forth the splendour of the marriage procession.

v. 13. "And the daughter of Tyre is there with a gift—even the rich among the people intreat thy favour."

v. 15. tūval. "~~She~~ is (now) led"—the procession is moving on.

vv. 15-16. "~~Are they brought—they are entering.~~"

vv. 17-18. A second address to the bride.

PSALM XLVI.

v. 4. Lit. "Let the waters thereof roar—let the mountains shake—(yet is there) a river, the streams whereof make (are making) glad the city of God."

v. 6. "He shall help her, even God."

v. 10. In the second clause of this verse kiṣēš is a Perfect subjoined to the Imperfect yesabbēr. The destruction of the weapons of war is regarded as one operation.

PSALM XLVII.

vv. 3-4. "He subdueth—is subduing.—He chooseth."

PSALM XLVIII.

v. 10. dimminū. "We think habitually upon—we reflect upon."

PSALM XLIX.

v. 11. wē-āzēvū is a Perfect subjoined to the Imperfect yōvēdū.

v. 15. "Death feedeth on them: then have the upright dominion over them."

PSALM L.

v. 3. yāvō. "Let God come, and let Him not keep silence." This clause comes from another part of the quire. It expresses the longing of godly men for the manifestation of God's righteous government of the world. In the following words the narrative is resumed: "A fire devoureth before him, and it is very tempestuous" etc.

v. 4. "He calleth."

v. 6. wai-yaggidū. "Then (thereupon) the heavens declare His righteousness." This is the response, or joyful acclaim, of the heavens to the divine call in v. 4.

vv. 16-17. wal-tiśšā berīθ-i. "Thou presumest not only to declare (recount) my statutes, professing knowledge of them, but to go further and acknowledge a personal obligation to obedience: whereas all the time thou art a hater (śānēθā) of instruction, and from hatred proceedest even to open rejection of the Divine commands" (wat-taslēk).

PSALM LI.

v. 8 (E. V. 6). θōdiēnī. "Thou makest, art making, me to know."

PSALM LII.

v. 9 (E. V. 7). wai-yivtaχ. "And so (for man must have something to trust in) begins to trust in his wealth, and to make a god of that."

PSALM LIII.

v. 5. ōkēlē—ākēlū. Lit. being eaters of my people, they are eaters of bread, i.e. "Eating up my people is to them as natural and habitual as eating bread."

PSALM LIV.

v. 7 (E. V. 5). yāsīv. "He is rewarding." The Psalmist, seeing this, prays for the utter discomfiture of the oppressors.

PSALM LV.

v. 6 (E. V. 5). yāvō. "Come upon me (assail me)—wat-tekass-ēnī, then, as a further stage of distress, horror overwhelms me."

v. 7. wā-ōmar. "Then I say." This horror prevails to such a degree as to force from me these words, "O that I had wings like a dove—Let me flee away and be at rest."

v. 10. raiṭī. "I see habitually, I witness."

vv. 12-13. "For it is not an enemy that reproacheth me : then could I bear it : neither is it he that hated me that hath magnified himself against me. But it is thou."

v. 18. pādāh. "He redeemeth—He is the redeemer—for there are many with me."

v. 20. yisma. El. "May God hear."

v. 21. sālay. "He puts forth his hand habitually—he breaks (is a breaker of) his covenant." So likewise throughout v. 22.

PSALM LVII.

vv. 2-3. eḫēseh. "Do I make—am I now making—my refuge—I cry."

v. 4. yislay. "May He send from heaven—May God send forth."

PSALM LVIII.

v. 11. yismaḫ saddik. "Let the righteous man rejoice—his feet let him wash."

PSALM LIX.

v. 9. tišyak. "Whilst they are so daring and scornful, Thou all the time hast them in derision."

vv. 15-17. "They return—they wander. Then they grudge. But I sing." The pronoun, ānī, being expressed for the sake of contrast.

PSALM LX.

v. 6 (E. V. 4). This verse is identical in structure with the preceding verses ; yet whilst those verses speak only of distress and terror, this seems to speak of some hopeful sign following on past hopelessness. If this be the meaning, this verse would regularly be introduced by wa with an Imperfect. One way presents itself of escaping from this difficulty, namely to regard the latter clause of v. 3, and the whole of v. 6, as proceeding from a different voice or different part of the quire. The three petitions which thus mingle with the words of sorrow and complaint, are these—“Mayest Thou return to us again—Heal Thou the past—Encourage Thou us for the future.” In this view the Perfect nāḥattā at the beginning of v. 6 is subjoined to the Imperative rēfāh in v. 4, the we which in prose would be prefixed to it being omitted. The Particle we is not needed, because the connexion is sufficiently indicated by the recurrence of the chant from the same part of the quire. “Gilead shall be mine.” Shall be should be substituted for is throughout the sentence.

v. 12. Rather perhaps, “Wilt not Thou, O God ? Hast Thou cast us off and goest not forth with our armies ?” (zenaḥtā-nū wě-lo-šēšē). “Hast Thou so entirely cast us off, that Thou wilt not go forth with our armies ?”

PSALM LXIII.

v. 1. “Early do I seek Thee.”

PSALM LXIV.

v. 8. wai-yōr-ēm. This verse refers to v. 5. “Suddenly do they shoot their arrows. Then the arrow of God strikes them—suddenly are they wounded.”

vv. 9-10. "So they make their own tongue to etc.—All that see them flee away—Then all men fear—for they wisely consider."

v. 11. "Let the righteous be glad in the Lord and trust in Him—and let the upright in heart glory."

PSALM LXV.

v. 2 (E.V. 1). yēsüllam. "Unto Thee is the vow of each man performed."

v. 3. sōmēa, tēfillāh. Lit. "Hearer of prayer, even unto Thee do all men come," i.e. Thou hearest prayer, not at any particular time, but at all times: wherefore all come unto Thee, knowing that Thou hearest all. (yāvōū). "They come from time to time, whenever they are in sorrow or trouble."

v. 4. Attāh θekappērēm. The pronoun is expressed for the purpose of emphasis or contrast. "Thou—Thou only, purgest them away."

v. 6. ta-ānēnū. "By terrible things dost Thou answer us, when we pray."

v. 9. wai-yīrēū. "So they that dwell etc., fear."

PSALM LXVI.

v. 12. "Thou didst cause men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water, then Thou broughtest us out."

PSALM LXVII.

v. 5. kī θispōt. "For that Thou judgest—and governest."

vv. 7-8. nattenāh. "The earth hath yielded her increase. May God, our own God, continue to bless us—May God bless us, and may all the ends of the earth fear him."

PSALM LXVIII.

v. 8. rā·āsāh. "Shook." The Past time is indicated by the words bē·šēθēkā.

v. 10. Here gesem and naḫālāθē·kā may be regarded as equivalent to a double accusative after a verb of motion. The latter clause is a case of Concurrent Perfects; as if it were written wē·nilāh—wē·kōnantā. But the necessity of introducing the emphatic Attāh has led to the omission of the second wē; which if introduced must have been prefixed to the verb, and so would have broken the connexion of the pronoun Attāh with its verb. "A plenteous rain wast Thou all the time sending upon Thine inheritance. Whenever it was weary, Thou didst confirm it."

v. 14. im·tishevūn. This may be regarded as a strong negative, "Ye shall never lie," as in Ps. xcv. 11.

v. 23. āmar. It is the purpose or decree of God to bring his people from the lands wherein they are scattered, back again to this land; even from the Eastern mountains, even from the Western sea.

v. 25. The Psalmist, after reviewing the history of his people from their passage through the desert to their establishment in the land, dwells now on the crowning mercy of God who had enabled them to be habitual witnesses of the stately worship of Jerusalem. rāū. "They see," i.e. regularly, and as a custom.

v. 26. kiddēmū. The Perfect indicates the established order of the processions in the holy place. "The singers go before—The players on instruments follow after—among them are" etc.

v. 32. yeṣṭāyū. "May princes come out of Egypt—Even Ethiopia—may she stretch out soon her hands unto God."

PSALM LXIX.

vv. 11-12. wā-evkeh—wā-ettēnāh. "So I wept—Then I made sackcloth my garment."

PSALM LXXI.

v. 24. kī-vōsū. "For that they are confounded:" or, when they are confounded. The confusion of his enemies will be the evidence of the righteous judgment of God.

PSALM LXXII.

v. 2. yādīn. A Precative Form: one in the series of petitions which commences with 'tēn' in the first verse, and is carried on by 'yisū hārīm' in v. 3, and so on from verse to verse as far v. 8.

vv. 9-15. These verses are to be taken as indicative or affirmative. The sentence in v. 9 being inverted, and v. 10 following the time of v. 9. This whole passage is a response from another part of the quire, expressing an assurance that the prayer just heard will be more than fulfilled.

vv. 16-17. The whole of v. 16, and the first clause of v. 17, "May his name endure for ever," etc., are precative. The latter part of v. 17 is a response, as before.

PSALM LXXIII.

v. 3. ereh. Imperfect. "Whilst I was beholding—witnessing—the prosperity of the wicked."

v. 13. wā-erḡas. Lit. "So, or then, I wash," i.e. purity dwelling in the heart, extends itself to the hands—to all the acts and doings of the man.

v. 14. wā-ēhī. “Then I become,” i.e. after all this striving to be just and holy, pain and sorrow follow.

v. 15. āmartī—bāgadtī. Every such thought is an offence, an act of disloyalty.

v. 18. tāsīθ. “Whilst I am envying and marcelling, Thou settest them up and castest them down.” ‘hippaltā’ is a Perfect subjoined to the Imperfect tāsīθ; the wē, which would have been prefixed in prose to the Perfect, being here omitted.

vv. 21-22. kī yiθχammēs. “Though my heart is grieved, and I am etc.—So foolish am I—I am as a beast before Thee—Nevertheless—.”

PSALM LXXIV.

v. 5. yivvāda. “Formerly a man became famous for hewing down the trees of the forest, wherewith to make carved work, But now—.”

v. 8. āmērū. “They say in their heart, i.e. their deliberate thought, or purpose, is—.”

PSALM LXXV.

v. 8. sōfēt—yaspil—yārīm. Here the Participle or nomen agentis expresses the office, the general and permanent character; whilst the Imperfects express the special acts, by which from time to time that character is manifested.

PSALM LXXVI.

vv. 2-3. wa-ihī. “After the knowledge of God had been established in the land, then Salem became the seat of His worship."

v. 11. tōde-kā—taḫgōr. "The wrath of man praiseth Thee, i.e. yieldeth cause for praise—dost Thou restrain."

v. 13. yivṣōr. "Cutteth off—represseth."

PSALM LXXVII.

v. wē-ha-azīn. "And (for) he giveth ear to me at all times."

v. 13. wē-hāgīṭī. "And meditate." This Perfect is subjoined to the Imperfect ezkērāh, as marking a further stage of the same proceeding. But in the next clause the wē (ū) is prefixed to the noun; so the verb reverts to its original form as an Imperfect.

v. 16. "Thou didst redeem."

v. 19. "In the sea was Thy way—and Thy footsteps were not known."

PSALM LXXVIII.

v. 5. wai-yākem. "Then, after those wonderful works wrought in the delivery of the people out of bondage, He appointed a law."

PSALM LXXX.

v. 16. yōwēdū. "At the rebuke of thy countenance, they (Thy people) are perishing."

PSALM LXXXII.

v. 1. yispōt. "Is judging."

v. 5. lō yādē:ū — wē-lō yāvinū. Here the Perfect is used to express a permanent fact—a state of gross ignorance. The inability to discern between the just and the unjust, in particular cases, is expressed by the Imperfect.

PSALM LXXXIII.

v. 3. ya.ārīmū. "They are taking—are consulting."

PSALM LXXXIV.

v. 4. "They (or who) are continually praising Thee."

PSALM LXXXV.

vv. 2-4. These verses set forth, by the use of a series of Perfects, the abiding character or attributes of the God of Israel. He is a God who is favourable to His land—who brings His people back from captivity—who forgives iniquity and covers sin—who takes away wrath, and turns Himself from the fierceness of His anger. Upon this follows vv. 5-6 the prayer that God will turn His people from their offences (their folly mentioned in v. 8), so that His wrath, from which they are suffering at the time, may cease.

v. 8. ešmē.āh. "Let me hear what God the Lord is speaking—for He is speaking peace unto His people—but let them not turn again to folly."

v. 12. "Springeth—is springing—looks down constantly."

vv. 13-14. A continued description of a present blessing—giveth—yieldeth—goeth—setteth (or is setting).

PSALM LXXXVIII.

v. 14. šivva.tī—šēkaddēme-kā. "Unto Thee, do I cry at all times. Even at the first break of day, doth my prayer come before Thee."

v. 17. sabbūnī. "They surround me, like water, all the day; they compass me about together."

PSALM LXXXIX.

v. 3. āmartī. "I say—this is my settled and habitual conviction: to which I still hold fast, notwithstanding the perplexity and trouble of the time."

vv. 4-5. In these verses the Psalmist cites the Divine promise, on which his conviction rests.

v. 5. akīn—ū-vānīṭā. The Imperfect and the Perfect subjoined to it, express two stages of one process; the laying of the foundation, and the rearing of the fabric.

vv. 12-17. A present time runs through these verses. The word 'shall' ought to be omitted wherever it occurs in them.

PSALM XC.

v. 2. bē-terem — wat-tēxōlēl. "Before the mountains were brought forth and, when after the close of that period, Thou didst form the earth (or cause the earth to bring forth)." With the structure of this verse compare the structure of Ps. xcii. 8.

PSALM XCI.

v. 7. yippōl elēf. Lit. "Let a thousand fall," i.e. if a thousand fall. Compare Ps. cxxxix. 18.

v. 15. yikrā. "As soon as he calls, I will answer him."

PSALM XCII.

v. 5. "I triumph." In this Psalm I am expressing my triumphant gladness.

v. 10. yōvədū — yiṭpārədū. "Are perishing — are scattered." This (as shown by hinnēh) is the present fact in which the Psalmist is triumphing.

v. 11. Then, after the destruction of mine enemies, Thou exaltest me.

v. 12. "So mine eye seeth." A present time runs through the remainder of the Psalm.

PSALM XCIII.

vv. 3-4. yisū. "Let the floods lift up their waves—yet than the noise of many waters the Lord on high is mightier."

PSALM XCIV.

v. 7. The word doth should be substituted for shall in this verse; and likewise in vv. 9-10.

vv. 22-23. wa-ihī Y. "Then, at that stage of wickedness, the Lord is my defence. So He bringeth upon them their own iniquity, and cutteth them off."

PSALM XCVI.

v. 13. kī vā. "For He is come—He is come to judge." Compare v. 10, mālak. "He is already King."

PSALM XCVII.

v. 10. sōmēr—yaṣṣil. "He is their keeper, their guardian, at all times. He delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked, whenever the wicked assail them."

PSALM CII.

v. 17. kī vānāh. "When the Lord hath built up Zion, and hath appeared in His glory."

v. 18. The particle kī is carried on to this verse, "(When) He hath regarded the prayer of the destitute, and not despised their prayer."

v. 19. tikkāṭēv zōṭ. "Let this be written."

v. 20. "When He hath looked down, when the Lord from heaven hath beheld the earth."

vv. 24-25. wa is omitted before ōmar. "So I said."

PSALM CIV.

v. 12. "By them the fowls of the heaven have their habitation."

v. 31. yēhī kēvōd. "Be the glory of the Lord for ever. May the Lord rejoice in His work."

PSALM CVI.

v. 17. tiftax. In a prose narrative a wa would have been prefixed to the verb, thus wat-tiftax.

v. 34. lō-hismidū. This verse serves as a Preface to the narrative following in vv. 35-42, which sets forth the events which sprang out of the fact stated in the Preface.

v. 48. wē-āmar. This is a kind of rubric concerning the use of the preceding words of blessing, with which this Fourth Book of the Psalms closes. "When the reader recites these words, then shall all the people say, Amen." This was the established form for this purpose. See Deut. xxvii. 16-26.

PSALM CVII.

v. 24. hemmāh rāū. "These men are habitually witnesses of the works of the Lord in the deep." Compare Ps. lxxviii. 25.

PSALM CVIII.

This Psalm is composed of parts of two earlier Psalms, viz. Ps. lvii. 7-11, and Ps. lx. 5-12.

PSALM CIX.

v. 16. wai-yardōf. "Not only did he show no mercy, but he went further and persecuted the poor."

v. 25. wa-āni hāyīθī. "And I am become a reproach unto them—when they look upon me, they shake their heads."

v. 28. "Let them curse—for Thou art blessing me all the while. They rise up against me. Then are they ashamed, but Thy servant rejoiceth."

PSALM CX.

v. 3. lē-kā. "Thou shalt have."

v. 4. Attāh kōhēn. The promise, at the time of making it, is confirmed by an oath; but the fulfilment is future. "Thou shalt be a priest for ever."

v. 5. The difficulty, which has perplexed the expounders of this versē, may be removed by a small change in the stops; namely, by placing a comma after Adōnāi, and cancelling the Masoretic stop after yēmīn-kā. The passage will then run thus: "O Lord, at Thy right hand did he (my Lord) smite kings in the day of his wrath."

v. 6. yādīn. "He judgeth (is executing judgment) among the nations: he hath filled—he hath smitten."

v. 7. "From a brook in the way he drinketh," i.e. in his pursuit of the defeated enemies. "Therefore he lifts up his head," i.e. is refreshed and follows on, till he has utterly subdued them, according to the promise in v. 1.

Thus, the promise is set forth in vv. 1-4: the fulfilment is described in vv. 5-7.

PSALM CXV.

- v. 2. yōmērū. "Wherefore say the heathen?"
 v. 12. Y. zēkār-ānū. "The Lord is mindful of us."
 v. 14. yōsēf Y. "The Lord increase you."

PSALM CXVIII.

- v. 27. El Y. wai-yāēr. "The Lord is God—so He sheweth light."

PSALM CXIX.

v. 40. tāavtī. "I long—I am in an abiding or habitual state of longing." This force of the Perfect is recognized in v. 42, but not in vv. 43, 47, 48, and other places.

v. 171. tabba-nāh šēfāṭai. "Let my lips utter praise, when Thou teachest me Thy statutes."

v. 172. "Let my tongue speak (sing)."

PSALM CXXI.

v. 1. "I lift up."

vv. 3-4. al-yittēn. "May He not suffer thy foot to be moved: May He not slumber that keepeth thee. Behold, neither slumbereth nor sleepeth He that keepeth Israel."

PSALM CXXII.

v. 2. "Our feet stand," lit. have become standers (ōmēdōṯ hāyū).

v. 3. "Jerusalem, that is now builded, is as a city that is compact together" (hab-bēnūyāh).

v. 4. ālū. "Go up," i.e. as a custom regularly observed. Compare I. Sam. i. 3.

v. 6. "May they prosper that love Thee."

PSALM CXXVIII.

vv. 5-6. "The Lord bless thee out of Zion, and see thou the good of Jerusalem—and see thou thy children's children."

PSALM CXXX.

v. 1. kērāṭi-kā. "Do I cry unto Thee."

PSALM CXXXII.

v. 7. nāvōāh. "Let us go."

v. 9. kōhāne-kā. "Then, when Thou arisest, shall thy priests be clothed with righteousness and Thy saints shall shout for joy."

PSALM CXXXVI.

v. 21. This Perfect nāṭan is subjoined to the Imperfect yahārōg in v. 18.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

v. 4. "May all the kings praise Thee."

PSALM CXXXIX.

v. 1. ḡakarta-nī wat-tēdā. Lit. "Thou penetratest—pervadest me at all times—and so Thou knowest."

v. 13. "Thou didst possess—Thou wast covering me." The noun suggests the notion of past time.

PSALM CXLII.

v. 2. "I cry unto the Lord—unto the Lord do I make my supplication." All these verses 2-5 describe a present state of distress, which moves the Psalmist to the prayer contained in vv. 6-8.

v. 6. zā:aktī—āmartī. "I cry habitually—I say," i.e. it is my settled thought—my conviction.

PSALM CXLIII.

v. 7. wě-nimsaltī. "Hide not Thy face from me. If Thou hide Thy face, then shall I be made like unto them that go down into the grave."

PSALM CXLIV.

v. 3. wat-tēda-ēhū. "What is man, so that, in consequence whereof, Thou takest knowledge of him?"

PSALM CXLVI.

v. 10. yimlōk. "Be the Lord king."

PSALM CXLVIII.

v. 14. wai-yārem. "So, being such, He exalteth."

W

